Decolonizing Conservation Dean Sully, 2016-09-16 This book argues for an important shift in cultural heritage conservation away from a focus on maintaining the physical fabric of material culture toward the impact that conservation work has on people's lives In doing so it challenges the commodification of sacred objects and places by western conservation thought and attempts to decolonize conservation practice To do so the authors examine conservation activities at Maori marae meeting houses located in the US Germany and England and contrasts them with changes in marae conservation in New Zealand A key case study is the Hinemihi meeting house transported to England in the 1890s where it was treated as a curiosity by visitors to Clandon Park for over a century and more recently as a focal point of cultural activity for UK Maori communities Recent efforts to include various Maori stakeholder communities in the care of this sacred structure is a key example of community based conservation that can be replicated in heritage practice around the world

Thomson, 2016-11-10 The first comprehensive overview of architectural conservation in Asia Internationally renowned author John Stubbs follows up on the success of his previous volumes Time Honored A Global View of Architectural Conservation and Architectural Conservation in Europe and the Americas Architectural conservation is a rapidly expanding and under researched field in Asia and is international experts are often brought in making the subject of considerable interest to international academics Boxes and case studies by local experts add depth and interest to the authors meticulous research A website with extra information and resources accompanies the series <http://conservebuiltworld.com> Post-trauma and the Recovery Governance of Cultural Heritage

Toshiyuki Kono, Junko Okahashi, 2022-12-02 This book successfully represents the indispensable interdisciplinarity of viewpoints by its authors combining legal perspectives with architectural and anthropological approaches With the observation and analysis presented here this book is the first to demonstrate research based governance solutions for cultural heritage within the process of recovering from traumatic events Its opening statement is that universal international standards are not effective enough for the specific situations of disaster struck places A major objective of this monograph is to allow its readers to go through a learning experience from plural cases where reconstruction of cultural heritage became central to rebuilding a post disaster society This book introduces Japan as the most disaster prone country with a long history of confronting and overcoming the power of nature resulting in its unique solutions for cultural heritage resilience and sustainability But how do leadership and decision making become efficient in times of recovery Bearing in mind what may be lacking in Japanese practices this work also presents comparable governance models from other countries which indicate alternative solutions While a traumatic event may occur within one night the process of recovery could last for decades Such disasters also tend to recur In order that directly affected communities can sustain resilience throughout the long recovery period and that equally severe social trauma will not be repeated a continuous well maintained governance response is required whether grounded in local knowledge or national policy frameworks At the heart of this book is the matter of the reconstruction process involving networks of small and large communities Each of those has a role that becomes operational through linkages of contacts the interchange of knowledge and skills and above all through the sharing of common goals
