

In recent years, increased interest in medieval studies and Catholic theology have revealed St. Thomas as more than just quasi-official theologian to the Roman Catholic church, confirming his stature as one of the greatest thinkers the West has ever known. In his masterwork, the Summa, he synthesizes Aristotelian concepts on the nature of the living world and man, with Biblical teaching on God's loving purpose in creating them.

"This work is a remarkable achievement. When I first read about it, I was sceptical as to whether the project could be brought off successfully. I am happy to report that in my judgment—and in that of not a few others, who were at first equally sceptical—it has been done . . . The teaching of St. Thomas is presented in continuously flowing paragraphs with appropriate chapter headings, much more like the style of modern philosophers since Descartes. . . . The real meat of St. Thomas has been captured here with remarkable good judgment, and it is in fact a fresh and stimulation experience to read Aquinas' doctrine on a given point gathered all together . . . It should be a great help for initiating students into his thought. . . ."

W. Norris Clarke, S.J., Fordham University
International Philosophical Quarterly

"Today, as students seem to be looking for some kind of holistic account of Catholic doctrine, they are surely more ready to reconsider the Summa. It may often seem dated, but it is much less idiosyncratic than the works of such modern giants of Catholic theology as Karl Rahner and Hans Urs von Balthasar, and certainly far more lucid. In his admirable new translation, now available in paperback, Timothy McDermott has skillfully edited the text to about one sixth of its length. The publishers must be congratulated on a book of some 650 pages which it is a pleasure to read."

Aquinas on Creation Saint Thomas (Aquinas), Steven E. Baldner, Steven Earl Baldner, 1997 The immense achievement of Aquinas is to have explained so much of the Christian teaching on creation in philosophical terms Nearly everything essential to the Christian idea of creation the existence of the Creator the uniqueness of the Creator the fact that the Creator creates without intermediaries the fact that the creation is properly out of nothing the fact that the Creator creates freely is not only philosophically comprehensible according to Aquinas but also philosophically demonstrable although it is certainly comprehensible philosophically For Aquinas philosophy and theology are perfect working partners what philosophy can know only incompletely is completed by the revelation of faith True philosophical knowledge is never rejected by theology but only perfected and brought to completion
