The Other Woman Laurie LeFebvre, 2016-10-06 It was an extravagant celebration that night at the St Regis hotel in Washington D C Bottles of Dom Pérignon champagne were being popped and congratulations of high praises and honors were being given to me and my partner Dr Larry Pratt for the discovery of a drug that could restore the health and minds of patients with Alzheimer's It was a night that no one was ever going to forget I left the ballroom at around ten O'clock As I walked to the elevator I noticed the lobby was filled with people and laughter I was going to my room to finally get a good night's sleep As I stood at the elevator door waiting for it to open I suddenly felt a strange sensation of danger closing in on me That's when it happened something bumped into me No it wasn't just something It was more like an animal in heat She came out of nowhere and trust me I would have noticed her anywhere As she brushed her body past me she whispered something in my ear I wasn't sure what she said but somehow her breathless voice made my knees go weak I turned to look at her through the crowd She glanced back over her shoulder at me our eyes met and I suddenly felt sexually aroused An alarm went off inside my head and all my senses went into overdrive As I stood there watching in slow motion her hips shifted from side to side Her red backless dress shimmering in the light she disappeared into the cocktail lounge I could hear the piano playing That's when I looked at my watch and decided that I wasn't so tired after all I followed her inside and sat at the bar and ordered a brandy I wondered if she was waiting for someone maybe her boyfriend her lover who knows but for obvious reasons I didn't think it was her husband she was waiting for She looked beautiful in the candlelight Her lips were full and sensuous her eyes mesmerizing She crossed her long legs and the slit up the side of her dress parted showing me just a hint of her thigh She looked directly at me and smiled It took everything I had to remember I was still married or was I My temperature was rising I couldn't take my eyes off her I was like a moth being drawn to the flame This was for real and it was more dangerous than I could have ever imagined She was irresistible and like the sweet sharp edge of obsession I had to have her

The Log, 1952 Phantom Ladies Tim Snelson, 2014-11-15 Defying industry logic and gender expectations women started flocking to see horror films in the early 1940s The departure of the young male audience and the surprise success of the film Cat People convinced studios that there was an untapped female audience for horror movies and they adjusted their production and marketing strategies accordingly Phantom Ladies reveals the untold story of how the Hollywood horror film changed dramatically in the early 1940s including both female heroines and female monsters while incorporating elements of women's genres like the gothic mystery Drawing from a wealth of newly unearthed archival material from production records to audience surveys Tim Snelson challenges long held assumptions about gender and horror film viewership Examining a wide range of classic horror movies Snelson offers us a new appreciation of how dynamic this genre could be as it underwent seismic shifts in a matter of months Phantom Ladies therefore not only includes horror films made in the early 1940s but also those produced immediately after the war ended films in which the female monster was replaced by neurotic psychotic or hysterical women who could be cured and domesticated Phantom Ladies is a spine tingling eye opening read about gender and horror and the complex relationship between industry and audiences in the classical Hollywood era
