There would seem to be at the present time a very real need for a work dealing with the subject of serjeanty, one of the great English tenures and with the services due from those whom Domesday Book styles the King's serjeants servientes regis. Although the materials for such a study have accumulated rapidly of late, there is no modern book devoted to the subject, nor indeed is there any book which attempts to deal with it systematically in the scientific historical spirit. Blount's ever green little book Fragmenta Antiquitatis (Ancient Tenures of Land and Jocular customs of some manors) was issued so far back as 1679 and neither in its original form nor in its later editions does it supply the want. Indeed it touched on much that was not serjeanty at all while omitting a great deal that is essential to a study of the subject. It is only right to remember that as Blount modestly observes he published his collection for the entertainment and relaxation of the reader. He wrote as his preface informs us that the studious when weary with poring upon Littleton's Tenures and his learned Commentator might relaxere fibulam by recurring to these and smile at the inoffensive mirth both of our kings in former times and lords of manors in creating them. It is no systematic treatise, no classified arrangement that he sets before us but a scrap book or olla podrida ranging from the tenures or alleged tenures of great officers of state to those of humble peasants. He jotted down in the course of his researches undertaken for other ends tenures in some respect or other remarkable or singular. The King's Serjeants & Officers of State J. Horace Round, 2013-10-28 First published in 1971 The class of whom these pages treat were those who held their lands by serjeanty that is by the performance of some specified service either at all times or in time of war We may now turn to those serjeanties which can be traced back to the time of the Domesday Survey Several of them will be dealt with in detail in this volume
