

That was summer

By: Lily Sharplin 8NMV

Remember that time you were cantering over the fields?
Your head completely in a daze,
hands entwined in the horse's silky black mane.
The sun was high in the sky and you smiled to yourself as the fire coloured horse sped on.
That was summer.

Remember the time when you dived into the clear tropic sea and felt your long hair ripple, like a ribbon in the wind?
Running out of the sea and flopping down onto your warm beach towel,
to look up at the cloudless blue sky.
Hoping that summer would never end,
and somehow tricking yourself into thinking that school and winter wasn't a thing.
That was summer.

Remember the time when you played spotlight in the dark?
The sound of crashing waves echoing in the night and the giggles of friends as you hid in the tree?
The shadows of tents falling upon the field and there wasn't an awake person in sight.
You gripped onto the bark of the tree as bright white beams of light swung around, flickering through the branches of the pohutukawa.
That was summer.

How could you forget the time when your dad put up the big rope swing on the hill, and the feeling of adrenaline and queasiness as you swung high into the air?
Your family friends itching for a turn.
Or when you zoomed down the steep mount on your boogie board, long grass attacking your ankles, mud flicking up in all directions?
That was summer.

Do you remember the time when you were paddle boarding across the calm water?
Little silver fish darting underneath the board, sunlight reflecting off their skin making them shimmer.
That time when you tucked your legs right to your chest and looked down at the big black stingray that had burrowed in the sand.
That was summer.

Do you remember that time you were so hot you felt dizzy?
But you were saved by diving into the deep pool, feet skimming the surface before you launched yourself back up to instantly cool down.
Or when you felt the cold, chocolate ice cream on your tongue,
knowing that the season would come round again.
That was summer.
