Haas, 2018-09-05 How do leaders perceive threat levels in world politics and what effects do those perceptions have on policy choices Mark L Haas focuses on how ideology shapes perception He does not delineate the content of particular ideologies but rather the degree of difference among them Degree of ideological difference is he believes the crucial factor as leaders decide which nations threaten and which bolster their state's security and their own domestic power These threat perceptions will in turn impel leaders to make particular foreign policy choices Haas examines great power relations in five periods the 1790s in Europe the Concert of Europe 1815-1848 the 1930s in Europe Sino Soviet relations from 1949 to 1960 and the end of the Cold War In each case he finds a clear relationship between the degree of ideological differences that divided state leaders and those leaders' perceptions of threat level and so of appropriate foreign policy choices These relationships held in most cases regardless of the nature of the ideologies in question the offense defense balance and changes in the international distribution of power The Great Powers and Poland Jan Karski, 2014-01-16 This definitive study provides a comprehensive diplomatic history of Poland during the most seminal period in its existence when its destiny lay in the hands of France Great Britain and the United States Although sovereign in principle Poland was little more than an object of the Great Powers' politics and rapidly changing relationships from the end of WWI to the end of WWII Focusing on the shifting policies of the Great Powers toward Poland from the Treaty of Versailles to Yalta the book ends with Poland's tragic abandonment by the West into the hands of the Soviet Union Enriched by unique
