Bartholomew's Eve : a Tale of the Huguenot Wars : with Original Illustrations G. A. Henty,2020-01-11 It is difficult in these days of religious toleration to understand why men should three centuries ago have flown at each others throats in the name of the Almighty still less how in cold blood they could have perpetrated hideous massacres of men women and children The Huguenot wars were however as much political as religious Philip of Spain at that time the most powerful potentate of Europe desired to add France to the countries where his influence was all powerful and in the ambitious house of Guise he found ready instruments For a time the new faith that had spread with such rapidity in Germany England and Holland made great progress in France also But here the reigning family remained Catholic and the vigorous measures they adopted to check the growing tide drove those of the new religion to take up arms in self defence Although under the circumstances the Protestants can hardly be blamed for so doing there can be little doubt that the first Huguenot war though the revolt was successful was the means of France remaining a Catholic country It gave colour to the assertions of the Guises and their friends that the movement was a political one and that the Protestants intended to grasp all power and to overthrow the throne of France It also afforded an excuse for the cruel persecutions which followed and rallied to the Catholic cause numbers of those who were at heart indifferent to the question of religion but were Royalists rather than Catholics The great organization of the Church of Rome laboured among all classes for the destruction of the growing heresy Every pulpit in France resounded with denunciations of the Huguenots and passionate appeals were made to the bigotry and fanaticism of the more ignorant classes so that while the power of the Huguenots lay in some of the country districts the mobs of the great towns were everywhere the instruments of the priests I have not considered it necessary to devote any large portion of my story to details of the terrible massacres of the period nor to the atrocious persecutions to which the Huguenots were subjected but have as usual gone to the military events of the struggle for its chief interest For the particulars of these I have relied chiefly upon the collection of works of contemporary authors published by Monsieur Zeller of Paris the Memoirs of Francois de la Noue and other French authorities ST. many thousands had been massacred by the soldiery burned at the stake or put to death with dreadful tortures Fifty thousand it was calculated had in spite of the most stringent measures of prevention left their homes and made their escape across the frontiers These had settled for the most part in the Protestant cantons of Switzerland in Holland or England As many of those who reached our shores were but poorly provided with money they naturally settled in or near the ports of landing Canterbury was a place in which many of the unfortunate emigrants found a home Here one Gaspard Vaillant his wife and her sister who had landed in the year 1547 had established themselves They were among the first comers but the French colony had grown gradually until it numbered several hundreds The Huguenots were well liked in the town being pitied for their misfortunes and admired for the courage with which they bore their losses setting to work each man at his trade if he had one or if not taking to the first work that came to hand They were quiet and God fearing folk very good towards each other and to their poor countrymen on their way from the coast to London entertaining them to the best of their power and sending them forward on their way with letters to the Huguenot committee in London and with sufficient money in their pockets to pay their expenses on the journey and to maintain them for a while until some employment could be found for them Gaspard Vaillant had been a landowner near Civray in Poitou He was connected by blood with several noble families in that district and had been among the first to embrace the reformed religion For some years he had not been interfered with as it was upon the poorer and more defenceless classes that the first fury of the persecutors fell but as the attempts of Francis to stamp out the new sect failed and his anger rose more and more against them persons of all ranks fell under the ban The prisons were filled with Protestants who refused to confess their errors soldiers were quartered in the towns and villages where they committed terrible atrocities upon the Protestants and Gaspard seeing no hope of better times coming or of being permitted to worship in peace and quietness gathered together what money he could and made his way with his wife and her sister to La Rochelle whence he took ship to London Disliking the bustle of a large town he was recommended by some of his compatriots to go down to Canterbury where three or four fugitives from his own part of the country had settled One of these was a weaver by trade but without money to manufacture looms or set up in his calling Gaspard joined him as partner embarking the little capital he had saved and being a shrewd clear headed man he carried on the business part of the concern while his partner Lequoc worked at the manufacture As the French colony in Canterbury increased they had no difficulty in obtaining skilled hands from among them The business grew in magnitude and the profits were large in spite of the fact that numbers of similar enterprises had been established by the Huguenot immigrants in London and other places They were indeed amply sufficient to enable Gaspard Vaillant to live in the condition of a substantial citizen to aid his fellow countrymen and to lay by a good deal of money His wife s sister had not remained very long with him She had upon their first arrival given lessons in her own language to the daughters of burgesses and of the gentry near the town but three years after the arrival of the family there she had married a well to do young yeoman who farmed a hundred acres of his own land two miles from the town His relations and neighbours had shaken their heads over what they considered his folly in marrying the pretty young Frenchwoman but ere long they were obliged to own that his choice had been a good one Just after his first child was born he was when returning home one evening from market knocked down and run over by a drunken carter and was so injured that for many months his life was in danger Then he began to mend but though he gained in strength he did not recover the use of his legs being completely paralysed from the hips downward and as it soon appeared was destined to remain a helpless invalid all his life From the day of the accident Lucie had taken the management of affairs in her hands and having been brought up in the country and being possessed of a large share of the shrewdness and common sense for which Frenchwomen are often conspicuous she succeeded admirably The neatness and order of the house since their marriage had been a matter of surprise to her husband s friends and it was not long before the farm showed the effects of her management Gaspard Vaillant assisted her with his counsel and as the French methods of agriculture were considerably in advance of those in England instead of things going to rack and ruin as John Fletcher s friends predicted its returns were considerably augmented Naturally she at first experienced considerable opposition The labourers grumbled at what they called new fangled French fashions but when they left her their places were supplied by her countrymen who were frugal and industrious accustomed to make the most out of small areas of ground and to turn every foot to the best advantage Gradually the raising of corn was abandoned and a large portion of the farm devoted to the growing of vegetables which by dint of plentiful manuring and careful cultivation were produced of a size and quality that were the surprise and admiration of the neighbourhood and gave her almost a monopoly of the supply of Canterbury
