Staffing At-Risk School Districts in Texas: Problems and Prospects, 1999 The research reported here was supported by Grant No R306F6O175 from the U S Department of Education Office of Educational Research and Improvement s Field Initiated Studies Grant Program Teacher supply and demand issues are of critical importance as our society enters the 21st century Over the next decade we will need about two million new teachers largely because of a dramatic increase in enrollments and high attrition rates as an aging teacher workforce becomes eligible for retirement It is important to understand where these teachers will come from and where they will teach as our society faces increasing racial ethnic and linguistic diversity Amidst this diversity is a continuing concern that some racial ethnic groups are disproportionately placed at risk The larger project focuses on teachers of at risk children with special emphasis on the supply and demand patterns of minority teachers who tend to be the ones primarily teaching in high risk districts This report analyzes longitudinal data on teachers from Texas between 1979 and 1996 to address this issue Our results show that although Texas has been successful in attracting minority teachers it has a long way to go in attaining the goal of the Texas State Board of Education to have a teacher workforce that reflects the racial ethnic composition of the state These results should be of interest to researchers and policymakers dealing with issues of teacher supply and demand particularly with respect to minority teachers

The Cost of Class Size Reduction Robert E. Reichardt,2000 Class size reduction CSR in California was a popular rapidly implemented reform that improved student performance This dissertation provides information to state level policy makers that will help them avoid two implementation problems seen in California s CSR implementation The first problem was with flat per student reimbursement scheme did not adequately cover costs in districts with larger pre CSR class sizes or smaller schools To help policy makers understand the relationship between existing conditions at schools policy choices and costs four simple rules of thumb were created through analysis of a simulation of CSR in seven Florida school districts At a classroom cost of 53 000 the rules of thumb per student cost for CSR is a 435 for reduction to 20 double for reduction to 17 and triple for reduction to 15 when existing class size is 24 These rules of thumb and three other reimbursement strategies are evaluated for their ability to adequately estimate reimbursements for the cost of CSR The strategy used in California of a flat per student reimbursement was the least efficient Strategies using district information on costs class sizes and enrollments are adequate for reimbursing districts The rules of thumb was the most robust strategy for reimbursing schools A second problem seen in California was a decrease in the qualification level of the kindergarten through third teacher workforce The largest decrease were in schools with higher concentrations of low income or minority students Modeling the flow of K 3 teachers during the first year of CSR shows within district transfers create more vacancies in schools with more minority students Vacancies were then more likely to be filled with unqualified teachers Potential policy responses to this problem are to not fill classrooms created by CSR with transfer teachers and to provide incentives for teachers to remain in schools that are difficult to staff
