THE SOCIOLOGY OF INDUSTRIAL INJURY

'... this is an excellent and thought-provoking book that safety professionals and politicians should read'

Health, Safety and Environment Bulletin

'Throughout the book ... is the sheer intellectual rigour and skill that Nichols brings to bear on the subject'

Work, Employment and Society

'... the work of an intellectual craftsman ... there is a tough analysis of the brutal realities that damage, maim and sometimes take away the lives of real people in circumstances not of their choosing. This is a sociology which connects with the world that is often hidden even from social scientists whose job it surely is to bring uncomfortable realities into focus'

New Technology, Work and Employment (1999)

'This text is of enormous importance as a statement of the promise and contours of a sociology of industrial injury ... This text confirms Nichols' place as the key sociologist of industrial injury'

Sociology

First published in 1997, this book makes an original contribution to industrial injury from the theoretical standpoint of political economy. Going beyond common sense and psychological explanations of 'accidents', it concentrates on injury rates rather than individual occurrences. The author's extensive empirical research, which draws on a variety of methods, is centred on manufacturing, but also extends to the construction industry and coal-mining.

Theo Nichols is Professor of Sociology, University of Bristol.
