to division into small kingdoms ruled by chiefs locally known as mangi At the end of the wars the slopes were divided into three major areas named Rombo Vunjo and Hai each ruled by a number of mangi The seniority of each mangi was measured by his wealth The population increased rapidly as peace was established The people on the slopes of the mountain live very closely packed with water and road facilities comparable to a large metropolitan city but only with trees and foliage not concrete First Hai was highly populated followed by Vunjo but Rombo was sparsely populated as it was the leeward side of the mountain Before the time of Touwa schooldays the Nanjara village which is in Rombo was a prime area for land ownership such that Europeans were in pursuit to grab some of that land It was in that state of competition that the local mangi sent vanguards like Touwas grandfather and many others to occupy the land to prevent European settlement That was how the Nanjara village came to existence The Chagga people have basically one culture one language with area based differences of accents and Nanjara village life could reflect life for all Chagga people Alien Road M.J.
