
THE DYING CHILD

The Management of the Child or Adolescent Who is Dying

WILLIAM M. EASSON, M.D.

*Professor and Chairman
Department of Psychiatry
Medical College of Ohio at Toledo
Toledo, Ohio*

Death — universal, inevitable, and incomprehensible — can never be fully understood by the human mind, yet the death of a child is especially difficult to comprehend and to manage. The death of a child or adolescent seems to be against the laws of nature and man. These young people are just beginning to live when life is taken from them; they are just starting to be actively productive when their activity is stilled forever. Difficulty may arise when trying to deal meaningfully with a dying child or adolescent without adding further to the burden of this young person.
