

INDIGENOUS PEOPLES OF CALIFORNIA

Tribes, Language, and Geography

The Indigenous Peoples of California and their tribes have a profound and intricate relationship with their environment and geography. Each tribe has its own unique language that serves as vessels of knowledge, carrying the wisdom of generations, and embodying the deep connections between the Indigenous Peoples and the land they have inhabited for thousands of years. The linguistic diversity of tribes is remarkable. Prior to the Spanish Colonial Period, it is estimated that there were more than 100 distinct languages spoken within the State of California.

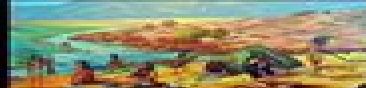

Timeline of Indigenous Peoples of California to the Spanish Colonial Era

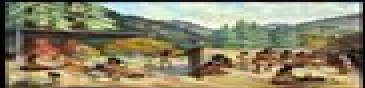

20,000 BCE:
Paleo-Indian Migration

The first peoples are believed to have migrated from Asia to the Americas, including what is now California, through the Bering land bridge during the last ice Age. These early settlers are known as Paleo-Indians. They were skilled hunters of large creatures, such as mammoths, mastodons, and bison, and they moved to find food resources.

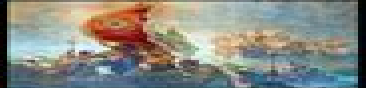

8,000 BCE - 1,000 CE:
Archaic/Agricultural Period

Agglutinated (Fishes): As bonytrachians, early agglutinates adapted to diverse environments and developed diverse body structures for food foraging.

1,000 CE - 1,500 CE:
Middle Period

Indefinite Period: With a significant increase in population and cultural diversification, indigenous peoples in California developed their agricultural practices, developed trading networks, and established more permanent settlements. The construction of elaborate ceremonial structures, such as earthenware mounds and rock art, became more common.

1542 CE: Spanish Exploration

Juan Rodríguez Cabrillo, a Portuguese explorer sailing under the Spanish flag, led the first European expedition along North America's west coast. His party landed near present-day San Diego, and sailed north to present-day Oregon, but did not establish permanent settlements. His records aided future European exploration and navigation.

1769 CE:
Spanish Colonial Era

Spanish colonization of California began with the establishment of a series of missions and presidios. The Spanish, led by Gaspar de Portolá and Junipero Serra, aimed to convert the indigenous peoples to Christianity and expand Spanish influence. They faced hardships such as forced labor, disease, and the loss of traditional lands.
