

The Gospel Of Mary

I was not alarmed when the doves continued to coo though their wings were burning.

I was on fire too.
It was morning. I was there with the eleven. We were gathered in the vestibule of the upper room.

Our breath thickened, colors deepened.
For just one instant I saw the root of love staked through the ceiling. But so few of them received the vision at its core.

They tried to think it through. It was not for thought. It was more for holding and becoming. Light brandished from our fingertips like swords of warrior angels.

When it extinguished,

I flashed my ordinary hands and we all laughed.

Because they asked, I told them what he said to me in private,

I didn't say he'd kissed me on the mouth. I told them how

I met the savior inside my head.
How our thoughts entwined

like bean stalks through swatches of clouds.

How he said thought created matter, and that fear is ingenious for damaging the world.

He said Here is the soul, here the Spirit,

the mind
