The Diplomacy Of Modernization:

The Diplomacy of Modernization Stephen J. Randall, 1977 Social Reform, Modernization and Technical Diplomacy Véronique Plata-Stenger, 2020-04-20

Founded in 1919 under the Treaty of Versailles as part of the League of Nations system the ILO is still today the main organization responsible for the international organization of work and the improvement of working conditions in the world. Widely recognized for its efforts in building international labour standards the ILO remains little studied by development specialists and historians. This book intends to fill this gap and traces the history of international development and its early pioneers through an analysis of the activities of the International Labour Office, the Secretariat of the International Labour Organization between 1930 and 1946. In this book development is used as a key to questioning the ILO's place and function in the expanding inter-war world. The development practices and discourses that emerged in the 1930s were mainly intended to support the ILO's universalization strategy which was made necessary by the events that shook Europe at the time. Development discourses and practices were also part of the esprit du temps as they were closely linked to the affirmation of the planist and rationalist ideas of the 1930s. However, development for the ILO was not reduced to a project of economic modernization but was seen as a tool for social engineering as evidenced by the ILO's missions of technical assistance organized since 1930. The analysis of the expertise work makes it possible to highlight the logics that prevailed in technical assistance which was more in line with institutional objectives than with the dissemination of a genuine expertise. This book therefore hopes to bring new insight on the history of internationalism and international organizations during the inter-war period and the Second World War as well as on the role of the ILO in the history of international development thinking and practices.

Drawing upon extensive research in the United States, Colombia and Great Britain, The Diplomacy of Modernization examines the evolution of United States foreign policy in Colombia between the world wars, concentrating on the period of the Herbert Hoover and Franklin D. Roosevelt administrations, years generally associated with the formulation and implementation of the Good Neighbor Policy. Historians of the United States Latin American policy have concentrated on the giants of the inter-war years: Mexico, Cuba, Brazil and Argentina. Yet the second ranking powers such as Colombia are particularly significant for an understanding of the factors which shaped inter-American relations: the objective of U.S. policy and the impact of a major industrialized nation on a developing society. By the end of the First World War, Colombia occupied an important though clearly secondary place in United States Latin American policy. During the 1920s, Colombia was the third or fourth ranking trading partner of the United States in South America. Her strategic proximity to the Panama Canal also made her adherence to a pro-United States position an important objective of Washington's policy, as did the promise of major petroleum reserves that were yet to be exploited. Conscious of these issues and concerned that the spark of nationalism generated by the Mexican revolution would inflame other developing nations in Latin America, United States officials in the 1920s and 1930s re-examined the methods of American diplomacy and gradually moved away from the cruder forms of military intervention gunboat and dollar diplomacy In analysing the commercial financial and industrial presence of U S interests in Colombia and their diplomatic manifestations this study suggests the extent to which the United States erected a policy designed to provide primacy for American interests rather than the equality of treatment implied in the terms good neighbor and open door
