

Planning

- Multiple factors affect postoperative pain (e.g., type of surgery, pain threshold, patient age, chronic pain, opioid tolerance)
- Identify patients at high risk of postoperative pain and discuss analgesic strategy before surgery
- Educate patient on home pain relief
- Administer first postoperative analgesia before intraoperative analgesia and local anesthesia wear off

Pharmacological analgesia

- Paracetamol: Mild analgesic with few side-effects
- Non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs (NSAIDs): Administer preoperatively or early during surgery do account for long onset of action
- Opioids: Balance the analgesic effect against side-effects (nausea and vomiting, sedation, pruritus, respiratory depression, constipation, urinary retention)
- Adjuvants (e.g., gabapentinoids, N-methyl-D-aspartate receptor antagonists, alpha-2 adrenergic agonists): Reduce pain and opioid requirements as part of a balanced multimodal analgesic strategy
- IV clonidine and dexmedetomidine reduce pain intensity, opioid consumption, and postoperative nausea
- Low-dose IV ketamine reduces opioid requirements, nausea, and vomiting
- Dexamethasone ≥ 0.1 mg/kg has intrinsic analgesic effects

Regional anesthesia

- Excellent pain relief, often eliminates opioid requirement
- Better patient satisfaction and possible reduction in length of stay
- Local anesthetic infiltration
- Peripheral nerve blocks (single injection or continuous)

Neuraxial anesthesia

- Epidural block
- Spinal anesthesia
- Commence oral analgesia before return of sensation

Example of pain management strategy (modification of WHO pain ladder)

Anticipated pain	Mild	Moderate	Severe
Pain score	1-3	4-7	7-10
Regular (at timed intervals)	Simple analgesics: Paracetamol and/or low-dose weak opioids Use local infiltration or regional blocks when possible	Add NSAIDs +/- weak opioids Use local infiltration or regional blocks when possible	Add strong opioid Replace weak opioids with strong opioids Consider epidural block/patient-controlled analgesia
As required	NSAIDs or weak opioids	Short-acting opioids (e.g., morphine oral/IV/IM)	Short-acting opioids (e.g., morphine oral/IV/IM) Patient-controlled (epidural) analgesia

Topics in Regional Anesthesia Víctor M. Whizar-Lugo, José Ramón Saucillo-Osuna, Guillermo Castorena-Arellano, 2022-06-08 Regional anesthesia has progressively evolved and currently occupies a predominant place in our daily practice The development of skills for the safe practice of regional anesthesia requires in depth knowledge of anatomy physiology pharmacology and the pathology of each patient candidate to receive some type of regional block as well as special and prolonged training beyond residence particularly in this era of the COVID 19 pandemic during which the training of thousands of anesthesiology residents has been impaired Undoubtedly the benefits of regional anesthesia techniques are enormous as are their complications Countless guidelines for regional anesthesia have been described based on the classic anatomical recommendations the search for paresthesias neurostimulation and medical images The introduction of ultrasound guidance and the rational use of local anesthetics and their adjuvants have favorably revolutionized regional anesthesia making it safer and more effective This book addresses several contemporary topics in regional anesthesia in a variety of interesting clinical settings with practical importance
