

5 WAYS CATS ARE GOOD FOR MENTAL HEALTH

BENEFIT 1: STRESS RELIEF

A study by Washington State University found that sitting down to cuddle a cat for just a few minutes can significantly reduce stress. It lowers the amount of cortisol (a stress hormone) that the body produces, and it can have instant effects.

BENEFIT 2: BUILT-IN BFF

Good friendships are a vital part of mental health. Friends fulfill our basic need for social interaction and emotional connection. They make us laugh and keep us from feeling lonely. Human friends are important, but the bonds we share with our cats can be just as valuable.

BENEFIT 3: PURPOSE & ROUTINE

Many therapists recommend routines for people struggling with their mental health. When you have a cat, their well-being depends on your ability to feed them on time, clean their litter box, and provide them with attention. That routine provides people with self worth and confidence.

BENEFIT 4: FEELING THE LOVE

Studies show that cats can trigger the release of oxytocin. This is the same hormone that makes mothers feel all warm and fuzzy when they look at their babies. Looking at your cat can do the same thing, and your mental health gets an incredible boost.

BENEFIT 5: SELF REGULATION & CONTROL

As timid animals, cats practically demand that people learn to control their emotions and regulate their actions. They don't like sudden movements or loud noises. Cats teach us how our moods and behaviors can affect others, and that helps us when we leave the house to make human connections.
