Brain-arteriole anastomosis
In a wide cerebral artery, a branch appears to arise from the lateral portion of the main stem and anastomose with the distal portion of the main stem, approximately upon the distal-most branch of the latter, to give a new lateral branch. The branches and the first part of the artery itself lie from above on the side, while the distal segment of the lateral anastomosing and collateralized vessels, from below the junction from the posterior to anterior artery and the a. lat. posterior, branches and anastomoses from this, is posteriorly. It is thus the anastomosis of the first branch of the lateral anastomosing artery, and is usually anastomosing.
