The Girmitya Peasants in Suriname Ruben Gowricharn,2024-08-20 This book examines the Indo Surinamese Girmitya peasants and their contributions to developing the ethnic community within their newly adopted home It demonstrates the transformation of the Girmityas from agriculturalists in British India to plantation labourers to peasants and finally to urban dwellers The author argues that it was the Girmitya peasants who had made greater contributions to developing the ethnic community over the labourers of whom about one third returned to British India The work covers the history of how the peasants institutionalised their practice changed the physical landscape and integrated economically and politically as an ethnic group in their newly adopted homeland Furthermore the author presents arguments to demonstrate that Girmitya peasants survived the plantation labour and peasant life due to their knowledge and skills of agrarian cultivation known as agrarian human capital The scholarly literature about the labour migration from British India has focused heavily on the fate of the labourers Consequently the history of the Girmitya peasants as well as the cultural heritage they have produced has been grossly neglected This book purports to fill this void by telling the history of Girmitya peasants in Suriname a Caribbean society adjacent to former British Guyana
