Patrick Geary is alarmed by the rapid progression of nationalist movements in Europe and the popular support such movements receive. Historians bear the brunt of his displeasure because they are responsible, in his mind, for the re-emergence of these divisive movements. The result of such nationalist tendencies, in Geary's estimation, is a "deep crisis of identity" (3). Early medievalists often find themselves at the center of an explosive issue because "no other period of history is as obscure and obscured by nationalist and chauvinist scholarship" (9). Geary is emphatic in his declarations that medieval scholarship made history available to ideologues to distort and bend to promote their own agendas. Though the error was inadvertent, Geary feels uniquely qualified to correct centuries of misguided history.

In The Myth of Nations: The Medieval Origins of Europe, Geary argues that nationalism, as perceived by most people around the world, is a myth. Modern day Germans, Serbs, or any other "ethnic" people share
