Combat Operations John M. Carland, 2015-12-02 Stemming the Tide chronicles a critical chapter in the Vietnam War the first eighteen months of combat by the U S Army s ground forces When American ground troops entered the theater in March 1965 Communist forces were on the verge of military victory Reversing the tide the Army s brigades and divisions swept out of their bridgeheads into dangerous enemy base areas blunted the Communist offensive and shifted to a series of high tempo operations to keep the enemy off balance until more U S fighting units arrived in late 1966 Combat was grueling The enemy could be anywhere and everywhere and was often indistinguishable from the rural population Battles seemed to flow without order or logic over paddies and hilltops and victory was hard to measure when villages once taken were rarely held Little by little however improvements in communications and intelligence the helicopter s capacity to extend the battlefield and the enormous firepower available to commanders crystallized into an attrition and area denial approach to the fighting which brought an increasing measure of security to key towns and installations If the war was far from over when the period covered by this volume came to a close commanders nevertheless believed that the ingredients for ultimate victory were present chief among them the courage and perseverance of the American soldier in a ferocious war and the inventiveness of the U S Army in harnessing the latest in technology to project expeditionary force into a distant theater

Engineers at War Adrian George Traas, 2010 Engineers at War describes the role of military engineers especially the U S Army Corps of Engineers in the Vietnam War It is a story of the engineers' battle against an elusive and determined enemy in one of the harshest underdeveloped regions of the world Despite these challenges engineer soldiers successfully carried out their combat and construction missions The building effort in South Vietnam allowed the United States to deploy and operate a modern 500 000 man force in a far off region Although the engineers faced huge construction tasks they were always ready to support the combat troops They built ports and depots carved airfields and airstrips out of jungle and mountain plateaus repaired roads and bridges and constructed bases Because of these efforts ground combat troops with their supporting engineers were able to fight the enemy from well established bases Although most of the construction was temporary more durable facilities such as airfields port and depot complexes headquarters buildings communications facilities and an improved highway system were intended to serve as economic assets for South Vietnam This volume covers how the engineers grew from a few advisory detachments to a force of more than 10 percent of the Army troops serving in South Vietnam The 35th Engineer Group began arriving in large numbers in June 1965 to begin transforming Cam Ranh Bay into a major port airfield and depot complex Within a few years the Army engineers had expanded to a command two brigades six groups twenty eight construction and combat battalions and many smaller units CMH website Air Power History ,1999 Indochina Chronology ,2000 America, History and Life ,2002 Provides historical coverage of the United States and Canada from prehistory to the present Includes information abstracted from over 2 000 journals published worldwide
