

"Hindley hurried up from his paradise on the hearth, and seizing one of us by the collar, and the other by the arm, hurled both into the kitchen; where, Joseph asseverated, "owed Nick!" with a look of such malignity, and, so comforted, we each sought for our book to read in our advent.

"I treasured this book from a shelf, and pushed the house-door against it, and have got the time on with writing for twenty months; but my companion is impatient and peevish, and she is afraid of the woman's cloak, and she is afraid of the woman's shelter. A pleasant day, the day we are in, come in, he may believe, but we are verified - we cannot be damper, or colder, in the day we are here."

I suppose, however, that the first sentence took up more than half the day's work.

"How little did I dream that Hindley would ever make me cry so!" she says. "My head aches, till I cannot keep it on the pillow; and I am sure of it. Heathcliff! Hindley calls him a vagabond, and I don't want to sit with us, nor eat with us any more; and I am sure I don't want to play together, and threatens to turn him out of the house if we break his orders."

"He has been blaming our father (and mother?) for treating H. too liberally; and now he will reduce him to his right place."

I began to write, and the next day we wandered from manuscript to print. I saw a red ornamented title . . . "Seventy Times Seven," and the first chapter, "Seventy First." A Pious Dialogue, by the Rev. Mr. Branderham, in the County of . . . and then, "Seventy Second" was, half consciously, worrying my brain to guess what ladies Branderham would be likely to say. I wrote, and fell asleep.

Alas, I have been so long in the world, that I could not be that naive the poor such a terrible night! I don't remember another that I can at all compare with it since I was capable of suffering.
