

The Cold War: Contemporary European History

Topic: History | Words: 551 Pages: 2

The Cold War was a unique phenomenon that represented a fundamental political conflict on a global level. Researchers define the cold war as the state of extreme hostility between two states, with the extent of the confrontation bordering the state of war yet not reaching it fully (Bouwman 2). However, the situation observed in the 1970s-1990s in the highly conflicted relationships between the U.S. and the USSR can be considered the event that produced the concept of a cold war (Hansson 494). Though the Cold War is considered to be officially over due to the collapse of the USSR, the legacy of the strenuous relationships between the two states have defined the current relationships between the U.S. and Russia.

In the Cold War of the 1970s-1990, only two major countries were involved in the confrontation. Specifically, the U.S. and the USSR repeatedly failed to compromise and reconcile their differences in relation to their political stance and approach to economy (Hansson 494). The participation of both the U.S. and the USSR in the continuous competition that involved gaining military strength, technological and economic potential, and even the space race (Bouwman 4). Thus, while none of the parties sought to introduce military weapons into the equation and commence an unambiguous military conflict, the presence of profound antipathy in each participant toward the other was evident and quite easy to identify.

While pinpointing the exact event at which the tension between the U.S. and the USSR began to grow is quite complicated, there are ways to
