The Organization and Architecture of Innovation Thomas Allen, Gunter Henn, 2007-07-11 Building on his pioneering work on the management of technology and innovation in his first book Managing the Flow of Technology Thomas J Allen of MIT has joined with award winning German architect Gunter Henn of HENN Architekten to produce a book that explores the combined use of two management tools to make the innovation process most effective organizational structure and physical space They present research demonstrating how organizational structure and physical space each affect communication among people in this case engineers scientists and others in technical organizations and they illustrate how organizations can transform both to increase the transfer of technical knowledge and maximize the communication for inspiration that is central to the innovation process Allen and Henn illustrate their points with discussions of well known buildings around the world including Audi's corporate headquarters Steelcase's corporate design center and the Corning Glass Becker building as well as several of Gunter Henn's own projects including the Skoda automotive factory in the Czech Republic and the Faculty for Mechanical Engineering at the Technical University of Munich Allen and Henn then demonstrate the principles developed in their work by discussing in detail one example in which organizational structure and physical space were combined successfully to promote innovation with impressive results HENN Architekten's Project House for the BMW Group Research and Innovation Centre in Munich cited by Business Week April 24 2006 in naming BMW one of the world's most innovative companies Professor Thomas Allen is the originator of the Allen curve In the late 1970s Tom Allen undertook a project to determine how the distance between engineers' offices coincided with the level of regular technical communication between them The results of that research now known as the Allen Curve revealed a distinct correlation between distance and frequency of communication i.e. the more distance there is between people 50 meters or more to be exact the less they will communicate This principle has been incorporated into forward thinking commercial design ever since in for example The Decker Engineering Building in New York the Steelcase Corporate Development Center in Michigan and BMW's Research Center in Germany

The Organization of the Expert Society Andreas werr, Staffan Furusten, 2016-12-01 It is often claimed that we live in an expert society a society where more and more individuals take expert roles in increasingly narrow fields In contrast to more traditional experts most of these new experts lack generally accepted mechanisms for the certification and legitimation of their expertise This book focuses on these new as well as established experts and the efforts undertaken to secure and legitimate their expertise We view these efforts as organizing attempts and study them on four different levels the society the market the organization and the individual Based on empirical studies on these four levels of analysis The Organization of the Expert Society makes the argument that current organizing initiatives in the expert society are based in an objectifying view of expertise that risks concealing and downplaying key aspects of expertise Well intended organizing initiatives in the expert society thus run the risk of promoting ignorance rather than securing expertise Focusing on a current general and global phenomenon the rise and organization of an expert society The Organization of the Expert Society will be key reading for scholars academics and policy makers in the management fields of Organizational Theory Management Consulting Organizations Society Critical Management Studies as well as the disciplines of Sociology Political Science and Social Anthropology
