

History

It's only a week but already you are slipping down the cold black chute of history. Postcards. Phonecalls. It's like never having seen the Wall, except in pieces on the dusty shelves of friends.

Once I queued for hours to see the moon in a box inside a museum, so wild it should have been kept in a zoo at least but there it was, unremarkable, a pile of dirt some god had shaken down.

I wait for your letters now: a fleet of strange cargo with news of changing borders, a heart's small journeys. They're like the relics of a saint. Opening the dry white papers is kissing a bone.
