

Jimmy Carter changed the course of American foreign policy by declaring that it would be guided by a concern for human rights.

Carter's beliefs about human rights changed the way that the U.S. dealt with countries in the developing world. The U.S. stopped sending money to countries that ignored their citizens' rights, such as Nicaragua.

Carter also decided to return the Panama Canal Zone to Panama by 1999. Although some Americans feared that this would weaken national security, the Canal Zone treaties were ratified in 1978, and Panama now has full control of the canal.
