

MACROSCOPIC AND MICROSCOPIC POINTS OF VIEW

Thermodynamic studies are undertaken by the following two different approaches.

1. Macroscopic approach—(Macro mean big or total)
2. Microscopic approach—(Micro means small)

These approaches are discussed (in a comparative way) below :

S. No.	Macroscopic approach	Microscopic approach
1	In this approach a certain quantity of matter is considered without taking into account the events occurring at molecular level. In other words this approach to thermodynamics is concerned with gross or overall behaviour . This is known as classical thermodynamics	The approach considers that the system is made up of a very large number of discrete particles known as molecules. These molecules have different velocities and energies. The values of these energies are constantly changing with time. This approach to thermodynamics which is concerned directly with the structure of the matter is known as statistical thermodynamics
2	The analysis of macroscopic system requires simple mathematical formulae	The behaviour of the system is found by using statistical methods as the number of molecules is very large. So advanced statistical and mathematical methods are needed to explain the changes in the system.
