Councillors opposed plan to raze 123-year-old Philpott church

Developer says two 30-storey towers will provide 'badly needed housing'

TELEVISION REPORT

City councillors are opposed to a developer's plan to demolish a 123-year-old stone church in Hamilton and build two 30-storey towers. Instead, they've told city staff to leave the church as is, or if the city plans to demolish it, to build two 30-storey towers on the site. The plan would involve razing the church and building two 30-storey towers with roughly 700 residential units and commercial space on the property across from FirstOntario Centre.

A plan that doesn't involve razing the church would not be the fastest component in the St. Stephen's Avenue project, a consultant representing the developer, told councillors. "We're providing badly needed housing in a badly needed location," said Philpott, A2.

But officials didn't respond to The Spectator's requests for comment or said they couldn't share any details.

City councillors' office phone lines remained out of service as of Monday morning.

"We had an update from the city about the situation," said Councillor Gregor, who is the city's chief information officer.

"They're managing it," the city's chief information officer said, but he didn't have additional details.
