

Taste & Smell

Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we can respond to taste or olfaction, thereby using smell and taste to monitor our environment, is related to the number of chemoreceptor cells that respond to molecules dissolved in fluid (taste) and in the air (smell). The sense of taste is less discriminatory than the sense of smell, and there is an overlap between taste receptors. The sense of smell is highly discriminatory, with several types of olfactory receptors, each responding to particular odors. Taste and olfaction are related to smell, vision and hearing, important with the sense of food substances, but taste is particularly affected by the sense of smell.

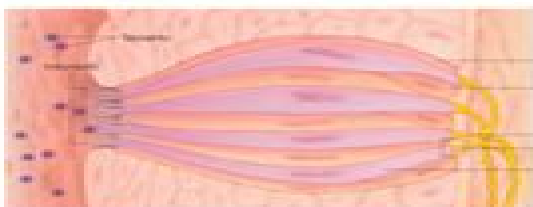

Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of substances in a given solution or solid. For low concentrations, bitter, sour and salty receptors may taste pleasant.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, contain chemoreceptor called gustatory cells. These taste buds have four basic components: sweet, salty, bitter and sour. A fifth taste, umami, or savory, has been reported. This flavor is associated with umami, or its agent, glutamate or meat broth.

The taste bud

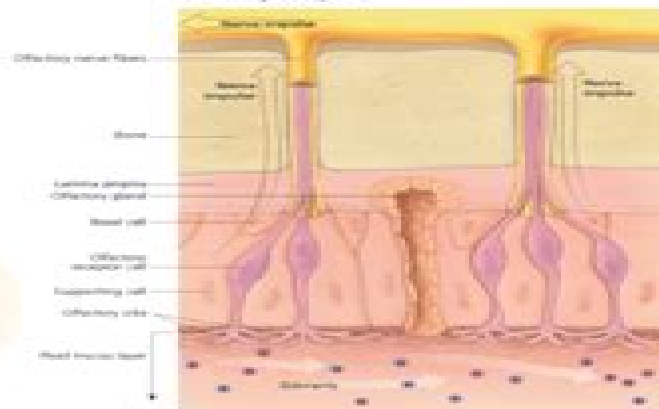

Umami, substances that produce taste, bind with receptor molecules on the surface of the gustatory cell. The resulting receptor potential travels to the basal end of the gustatory cell, where the gustatory cell is chemically stimulated to release the gustatory cell for molecular receptors. Gustatory cells live about 10 days, after which they are replaced by new cells generated from basal cells at the base of the taste buds.

Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

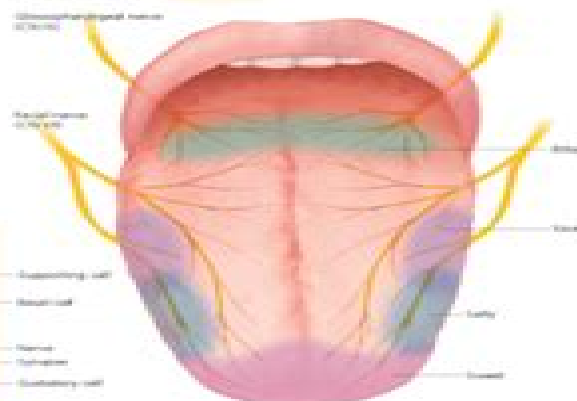

As air flows through the nose, the airflow across the nasal cavity creates turbulence, bringing odorant molecules into contact with the olfactory nerve, leading to the ability to detect odors by increasing the volume of air inhaled, which can increase the number of receptors.

Olfactory receptors

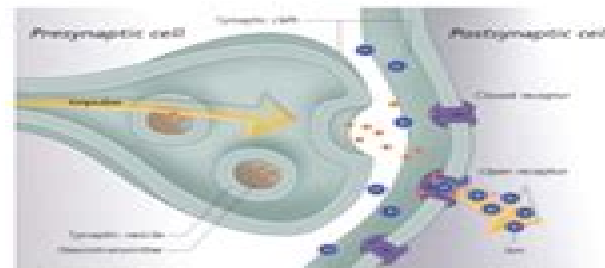

Olfactory receptors

Olfaction depends on the flow of air through the nasal cavity. The olfactory epithelium, the tissue that contains the olfactory receptors, is located in the upper part of the nasal cavity. The olfactory epithelium is composed of several types of cells: olfactory receptor cells, supporting cells, and basal cells. The olfactory receptor cells are the only cells that have cilia that extend into the mucus layer of the nasal cavity. The cilia are covered in a layer of mucus, which traps odorant molecules. The olfactory receptor cells are connected to the brain by the olfactory nerve.

Compound sweet and salty tastes, we are left with more receptors to taste compounds, and about 1,000 taste buds are located on the tongue. The taste buds are located on the tongue, and each taste bud has several taste cells. The taste buds are located on the tongue, and each taste bud has several taste cells. The taste buds are located on the tongue, and each taste bud has several taste cells.

The synapse

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neuron and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse enters at the top of the postsynaptic cell, the synaptic cleft, where "neurotransmitter" molecules called neurotransmitters. These highly specialized chemicals carry nerve impulses from the presynaptic cell to the postsynaptic cell, where the impulse enters the postsynaptic cell, where the impulse enters the postsynaptic cell.
