For Fear of the Fire Françoise Meltzer, 2010-08-15 Why are contemporary secular theorists so frequently drawn to saints martyrs and questions of religion Why has Joan of Arc fascinated some of the most important thinkers of the twentieth century In a book that faces crucial issues in both critical and feminist inquiry Fran oise Meltzer uses the story of Joan as a guide for reading the postmodern nostalgia for a body that is intact and transparent She argues that critics who place excessive emphasis on opposition and difference remain blind to their nostalgia for the pre Cartesian idea that the body and mind are the same Engaging a number of theorists and alternating between Joan's historical and cultural context Meltzer also explores the ways in which postmodern thinkers question subjectivity She argues that the way masculine subjects imagine Joan betrays their fear of death and necessitates the role of women as cultural others enigmatic mysterious dark and impossible As such Joan serves as a useful model of the limits and risks of subjectivity For Meltzer she is both the first modern and the last medieval figure From the ecclesial jury that burned her to the theorists of today who deny their attraction to the supernatural the philosophical assumptions that inform Joan's story as Meltzer ultimately shows have changed very little

Quest: V. Virom Coppola, 2004-03-16 The task before us in a nutshell my fellow humans is the clear and present danger of finding out who we really are That is the impossible feat I have given this poor creature V Virom and each of us with him The proof of the pasta is always in the tasting So says the author at the beginning of his book as he invites the reader on a detective story offering a beautifully written book with a rather remarkable synthesis of modern thinking one that builds from the ground of existence alone to a spirituality both secular and sacred That single paragraph on the cover of the book says what needs to be said it seems to me When I thought about this further and longer requested description of the book for the web site T S Eliot came to mind I am referring to the time when he was asked what his poem Prufrock was about and kindly replied Read the poem I do think he made a valid point because asking for a description of a book is the same when you think about it Shouldnt a person rather be reading the book itself At the same time I certainly can understand a person wanting to get a feel for the book before purchasing it and since you dont have the book to handle and page through to do that which I myself always do to see if there is going to be a love affair between the book and me I will give the viewer some of the Overture at the beginning of my book as an overture here as well hopefully to help accomplish the tangential absence Call it virtual foreplay if you want First Review From the Free Venice Beachhead News June 2004 Book Review QUEST A SEARCH FOR A SOUL MODERNKIND by Vincent Coppola Reviewed by Steve Goldman a former editor for Encyclopedia Britannica With great passion yet without a scintilla of mawkish sentimentality Coppola here makes the strong compelling case for love as the direct and primary
