These processes vary depending on the circumstances (the amount of a substance in a given volume of water, the temperature, the pressure and other conditions involved).

Glucagonin, the active hormone, gives an information about the food and about the time consumed. Yeast buds are the primary gustatory receptors with each taste bud containing three microvilli called gustatory cells. Three taste buds have been recognized: sweet, sour, bitter and salty. A 1998 paper, glucagonin is tastable, has been reported. This paper is associated with glucagonin, is not glucagon, not glucagon.

Discussion. Leishmania that produce more 'band' with respect to antibodies in the surface of the microvilli. The resulting stronger germinal strands in the basal part of the germinal cells, where the antigens is chemically concentrated across the membrane, lead to another reaction. Immunity will last about 10 days, after which they are replaced by new cells generated from band cells, at the base of the tissue ducts.

This diagram illustrates the cellular structure of the olfactory epithelium. It shows a cross-section of the tissue with several layers. At the top, the olfactory mucosa is shown, containing olfactory receptor cells (neurons) and supporting cells. The olfactory receptor cells have long, thin processes that extend through the mucus layer to the olfactory cilia. The supporting cells are located between the olfactory receptor cells. The diagram also shows the basal layer of the epithelium, which contains the olfactory nerve fibers. Labels on the left side of the diagram include: Olfactory mucous fibers, Bone, Olfactory epithelium, Olfactory gland, Blood vessel, Olfactory receptor cell, Supporting cell, Olfactory unit, and Blood vessel layer. The diagram is labeled 'Olfactory epithelium' at the top and 'Olfactory unit' at the bottom.

Different stimuli in the third neuron layer produced by the olfactory bulb, then travel to olfactory interneurons in the olfactory cortex. The stimulus presented that is produced travels along the axon to the olfactory bulb, which sends the signal to the higher brain centers. Unlike other senses, the olfactory neurons are connected directly to the central nervous system (that is, through the thalamus in the cerebral cortex).

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neurone and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse arrives at the tip of the axon, the terminal button which 'communicates' information called neurotransmitters. These highly specialised chemicals carry nerve impulses across the synaptic cleft between the axon and the adjacent neurone or cell, either initiating or activating neural impulses in the latter cell.
