how the Throckley coal company built up a village but shows that so too did the Throckley miners themselves the class relationships of the village are discussed in these terms The life story at the heart of the book illustrates how processes of the social construction of community arise from the compelling activities of everyday life and how from these in their turn arise the institutions of organized labour itself Culture and community are discussed as questions of identity social recognition and shared understanding None of these is static their changing meanings through war and industrial struggle are described here in the life of a single man and his family
