

The Holocaust Impact on Jewish Theology

Topic: Religion | Words: 1703 | Pages: 6

Introduction

The Holocaust was the most massive extermination of Jews in the nation's history. It resulted in the extermination of over 6 million Jews, and destroyed or displaced much of the Jewish population in Europe (Heuman et al. 4). Such a major event in a people's history had a tremendous effect on its theology. Rabbis and other religious leaders had to explain the horrible events that have transpired, through the lens of religion, in order to have the faithful draw lessons from it, find meaning in the terrible sacrifices that were made, and, eventually, move on. At the same time, the theological opinion on the matter split, with some parties viewing it as a punishment for past and present sins, while others denied the connection between the Divine and large-scale human cruelty. The purpose of this paper is to evaluate the four major viewpoints that have been developed because of the Holocaust.

Holocaust and Amalek

A prominent view on the Holocaust in the Jewish theology is derived from the Hebrew Bible. It connects the image of Hitler to that of Amalek, and his actions – to the punishment bestowed by God for their ancient failure to completely destroy those who lived in Canaan (Heuman et al. 119). The ancient task that God instructed the Israelites with was to obliterate Amalekites from beneath the heavens (Heuman et al. 120). It was a genocidal objective in its own right, one that the Israelites have failed to accomplish, as the king of Amalek, named Agag, survived the purge.
