Planning Theory Franco Archibugi, 2008-01-29 Planning Theory expresses a sound unease about the direction taken by the current analysis and criticism of planning experiences both in the field of economics and in urban and regional planning. Instead of seriously revising the technical and scientific shortcomings marking the various problems encountered in the planning experience in both fields, academic debates and reflection have instead led to a kind of political interpretation. On the basis of the hopelessness of improving the governance of managerial and political planning initiatives, planning theory has been reduced to a generic sociological debate on planning itself, a debate that freezes planning as a permanently declining engagement. To oppose this, the present book aims to identify the essential guidelines of a relaunch of planning processes and techniques, configuring a kind of neo-discipline called planology by the author, which builds upon a multi-disciplinary integration never seen and experimented with until now of economic, environmental and sociological approaches, a crucial element missing in previous unsuccessful planning attempts.

Forecasting in the Social and Natural Sciences

Kenneth C. Land, Stephen H. Schneider, 2012-12-06 Social and natural scientists often are called upon to produce or participate in the production of forecasts. This volume assembles essays that describe the organizational and political context of applied forecasting, review the state of the art for many forecasting models and methods, and discuss issues of predictability, the implications of forecast errors, and model construction, linkage, and verification. The essays should be of particular interest to social and natural scientists concerned with forecasting large-scale systems. This project had its origins in discussions of social forecasts and forecasting methodologies initiated a few years ago by several social and natural science members of the Social Science Research Council's Committee on Social Indicators. It became apparent in these discussions that certain similar problems were confronted in forecasting large-scale systems, be they social or natural. In response, the Committee hypothesized that much could be learned through more extended and systematic interchanges among social and natural scientists focusing on the formal methodologies applied in forecasting. To put this conjecture to the test, the Committee sponsored a conference at the National Center for Atmospheric Research in Boulder, Colorado, on June 10-13, 1984, on forecasting in the social and natural sciences. The conference was co-chaired by Committee members Kenneth C. Land and Stephen H. Schneider, representing respectively the social and natural science membership of the Committee. Support for the conference was provided by a grant to the Council from the Division of Social and Economic Science of the National Science Foundation.

Global Climate Change and California Joseph B. Knox, Ann Foley Scheuring, 2023-11-15 California's extraordinary ecological and economic diversity has brought it prosperity, pollution, and overpopulation. These factors and the state's national and international ties make California an essential test case for the impact of global climate change: temperature increases, water shortages, more ultraviolet radiation. The scientists in this forward-looking volume give their best estimates of what the future holds. Beginning with an overview by Joseph Knox, the book discusses the greenhouse
