

and appear to me valid and important. Especially valuable, perhaps, is the demonstration which Dr. Cullmann has given at various points that the σημεῖα and the sacraments have in common an eschatological reference. Thus he shows (with a reference to Apoc. iii. 20) that the feast at Cana is at once a type of the Eucharist and an anticipation of the messianic banquet. It is surely noteworthy that both are described as γάμος (Apoc. xix. 7 ff.); and is it too fanciful to suggest that such a γάμος fitly takes place 'on the Third Day' (Jn. ii. 1)? In any case, I believe that the recognition of this eschatological character illuminates both the nature of the Johannine 'signs' and the doctrine of the sacraments which the Fourth Evangelist intends to convey. Dr. Cullmann has made an important contribution to the understanding both of the life of Jesus and of the Christian cultus in their mutual relations as contemplated in the Johannine presentation of the Gospel.

CAMBRIDGE

C. H. DODD

Tertullian, Treatises on Marriage and Remarriage: to his Wife, an Exhortation to Chastity, Monogamy. (Ancient Christian Writers Series.) Translated and annotated by William P. LeSaint, S.J. Pp. viii + 196. Westminster, Maryland: Newman Press, 1951. $3.00.

Admittedly these are not among the more important of Tertullian's works: yet, as the translator observes, they do throw light on the domestic affairs of ordinary Christians at the beginning of the third century, as well as marking the stages by which (without substantially changing his ideas on this subject of second marriages) Tertullian developed from a catholic Christian with views of his own into a Montanist with the self-imposed mission of enforcing his rigorism on others. To which we may add, that if Tertullian is wrong, he is wrong in good company: in spite of Heb. xiii. 4, which seems to be a statement (A.V.), not a command (R.V.), Mediterranean Christianity tended to be afraid of certain aspects of marriage, so that even Jerome and Augustine (to name no others) were against their better judgement haunted by the fears which Tertullian had magnified into bogeys.

Professor LeSaint has done his work well. His Introductions are brief but sufficient: his notes are full of learning both ancient and modern, and the reference system is faultless. On a few points we should venture to differ. For instance, on p. 151 'carnal man' is equated with 'animal man' (ψυχικός), and regularly in the text 'sensualists' is the translation of Tertullian's psychici (i.e. those who do not agree with him). Is not this too strong? To St. Paul, and apparently to Tertullian, the psychicus, the 'natural man', is the man who lives not 'according to the flesh', but according to the dictates of human reason: his fault is not carnality or sensualism but lack of spiritual guidance. Again, (p. 159) there is no suggestion at de carne Christi 23 that the 'brethren' were sons of Mary: all that there is is a strongly-worded statement of the virginal conception, and an equally strong affirmation that what had remained virginity at the conception became womanhood at the nativity. On the latter point Tertullian has practically the whole of Christian antiquity against him.

Translations of Tertullian are notoriously difficult to make. Like Tacitus, he has a characteristic style, which it is not easy to imitate in another language. The Latin of both these authors is so brilliant that while it seems easier to paraphrase than to translate it, something of its incisive vigour is bound to be lost
