Abstract—The authors examined the effects of a 12-week, supervised, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program on the health and fitness of 10 sedentary, obese, middle-aged women. The program was designed to improve cardiovascular fitness, muscular strength, and body composition. The program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The first session was a low-impact aerobic workout, the second session was a resistance training workout, and the third session was a combination of low-impact aerobic and resistance training. The program was supervised by a certified personal trainer. The authors found that the program had a positive effect on the women's health and fitness. The women's cardiovascular fitness, muscular strength, and body composition improved significantly after 12 weeks of the program. The authors conclude that a supervised, low-impact aerobically and resistance training program can be an effective way to improve the health and fitness of sedentary, obese, middle-aged women.
