

As the Great Pyramid of Khufu began to rise over the Giza plateau in the Fourth Dynasty (about 2580–2560 BCE), a vast cemetery dedicated to high officials and royal family members gradually surrounded the king's royal funerary complex. Despite this impressive display of resources, the earliest Giza mastaba tombs enigmatically bear only minimal decoration: a rectangular "slab tomb" set into the exterior sun wall. The fifteen surviving stelae provide one of the most important sources for the study of early Old Kingdom art, religion, and history. This publication presents a fresh interpretation of the Giza stela, with new color photography, "digital epigraphy" facsimile line drawings, new translations, original discovery photographs, and recent color images taken at the site. Appendices include both color and line drawing paleographies of all hieroglyphs appearing on the stela.
