ROBIN HORTON & RUTH FINNEGAN (eds), Modes of thought: essays on thinking in Western and non-Western societies, London: Faber & Faber, 1973. Pp. 399.

This book contains articles from contributors in psychology, linguistics, history, sociology, anthropology, and philosophy which relate to the question of basic differences in thinking between Western and non-Western societies. Of particular interest to readers of this journal are articles by Benjamin Colby and Michael Cole ('Culture, memory and narrative'), Ruth Finnegan ('Literacy versus non-literacy: The great-divide?'), and W. H. Whiteley ('Colour-words and colour-values: the evidence from Gusii').

FRED W. HOUSEHOLDER, JR. (ed.), Syntactic theory 1: Structuralist. (Penguin Modern Linguistics Readings.) Harmondsworth, Middlesex: Penguin Books, 1972. Pp. 362.

These collections are two of the first four in the new series, edited by David Crystal, with the advice of Bolinger, A. K. Halliday, John Lyons, Frank Palmer, James Sledd, and C. I. J. M. Stuart. The other two, Communications in face to face interaction, edited by John Laver and Sandy Hutcheson, and Sociolinguistics, edited by J. B. Pride and J. Holmes, will be reviewed in this journal. Here we want to note that these two collections will also be of value to students of language in society. The one is an excellent introduction to a subject that is difficult, yet indispensable to understanding of speech styles, narrative performance, and the like. The other will reinforce those who consider that sociolinguistics must deal with the organization of means of speech in ways not slavishly dependent on any current logical model of grammar, and who recognize much in the 'structuralist' tradition as helpful in dealing with aspects of language of relevance to their work. (D.H.)

SUSAN H. HOUSTON, A survey of psycholinguistics. (Janua Linguarum, Series Minor, 98.) The Hague and Paris: Mouton & Co., 1972. Pp. 299, bibliography, index, list of abbreviations.

This book

. . . is planned as a beginning text in socio-behavioral linguistics, surveying the field in breadth rather than in depth and introducing the student to a wide selection of the topics most often provided by psycho- and socio-linguists.

Its character is reflected in the sentence immediately following:

The text presupposes no knowledge of psychology and only a beginning knowledge of linguistics, the latter including generative grammar theory.

It is the chief intent of this work to reveal for the student some of the many research possibilities open to him in sociobehavioral linguistics almost nothing of recent sociolinguistic research and literature is to be found. The major figures, as reflected in chapter headings, are Skinner, Mowrer, Osgood, Piaget and Whorf. Weinreich is noticed in connection with bilingualism, but not Ferguson, Fishman,
