The Influences of Social Capital on Lifelong Learning Among Adults Who Did Not Finish High School. NCSALL Occasional Paper Clare L. Strawn, 2003 This study of social capital employs data from the Longitudinal Study of Adult Learning LSAL funded by the National Center for the Study of Adult Learning and Literacy NCSALL and conducted at Portland State University to increase understanding of the learning process of adults with limited formal education It provides longitudinal data on how people continue learning in multiple contexts through formal adult education programs and in their daily lives This paper is presented in two sections The first is a theoretical exploration of the intersections of critical literacy adult learning and social capital theories The intent of this discussion is to introduce key concepts from multiple disciplines and develop a synthetic model of social capital influences on lifelong learning SCILL in which adults construct their social environment and the discourses that influence their learning strategies The second section empirically tests a piece of the SCILL Model related to the structural and discursive dimensions of social capital using data from the first wave of the LSAL Multiple measures of social capital are detailed The author argues that in addition to the structural dimension of social capital local discourse generated through interaction is an interpretive dimension of social capital The discussion ties the empirical and theoretical elements offering implications for the study of adult education participation in adult education for research on social capital Appendices include 1 Longitudinal Study of Adult Literacy Study Design 2 Instrument Items from LSAL Wave 1 3 Confirmatory Factor Analysis of Lifelong Learning 4 Tables of

Descriptive Statistics and Univariate Analyses of Indicators 5 Items Parameters in Final Models and 6 Model Calibration Contains 18 tables 3 figures and 6 footnotes Social Capital John Field, 2008 Social Capital offers an overview of the subject with explanation of the theoretical underpinnings the empirical work that has explored its operation the influence it has had on public policy practice Lifelong Learning, Intergenerational Learning, and Social Capital Ann Kristin Boström, 2003 Do Acquaintances and Friends Make Us Learn? Social Capital and Lifelong Learning in Germany Anna-Elisabeth Thum, Miroslav Bablavy, 2014 This paper examines the relationship between social capital and adult learning We test this association empirically using measures of various types of social capital and adult learning based on the German Socioeconomic Panel We use predetermined measures of social capital to exclude social skills or friends encountered during the adult education class Fixed effects for latent underlying factors such as deep personality traits and instrumental variables account for changing personality traits We find that most of our social capital measures have a significant and positive impact on the probabilities for investing in various types of adult learning The size of the effect varies across the different measures between increasing the probability of participating in adult learning by 0.04% to increasing the probability by 17% We find evidence that acquaintances are more likely to increase participation in adult learning than friends Human Capital, Social Capital and Lifelong Learning, 2003 The Benefits of Learning Tom Schuller, John Preston, Cathie Hammond, Angela Brassett-Grundy, John Bynner, 2004-02-26 How do education and learning really impact on people's lives The Benefits of Learning is a detailed systematic and vivid account of the impact of formal and informal education on people's lives Based on extended interviews with adults of all ages it shows how learning affects their health family lives and participation in civic life revealing the downsides of education as well as the benefits At a time when education is in danger of being narrowly regarded as an instrument of economic growth this study covers the interaction between learning and people's physical and psychological well being the way learning impacts on family life and communication between generations the effect on people's ability and motivation to take part in civic and community life Packed with detail from adults' own accounts of their lives the book reveals how learning enables people to sustain themselves and their communities in the face of daily stresses and strains as well as sometimes transforming their lives The book opens up new avenues for debate It is a valuable resource for education researchers and of particular interest to education policy makers adult education practitioners health educators and postgraduate students in education Social Capital, 2001 In her recent contribution to the British Educational Research Journal Pauline McClenaghan identified a core area of analytical debate the link between social capital and community development particularly community development education which is an important area where scholarly and policy interests overlap She concludes that the concept of social capital is unable to grapple with the complex social divisions that characterise contemporary Europe The authors question her account on three main grounds the definition of social capital which they hold is overly narrow and does not deal with what Woolcock calls the linking role of social networks the presentation of the theoretical foundations of community development they believe is flawed in certain key respects and a lack of clarity in the relationship between the research and the findings reported The authors then present their own account of social capital as a means of understanding the role of community development the challenges that it can face and the role of adult education for community development Author abstract ed
