Higher education is for everyone – regardless of age. Every year thousands of adults take the opportunity to develop themselves, and their careers, through higher education. They make up around a quarter of all full-time undergraduate applicants.

Education is for life

There is no typical mature student

Mature students are defined as any student aged 25 or over at the start of their studies. Just over a half are aged between 25 and 29, 38 per cent between 30 and 39, and 10 per cent are over 40 when they commence their courses.

What are the benefits?

There are many different reasons to enrol on a higher education course. This might include the desire to start a new career or develop an existing one, to turn an interest into something more, or to take a 'second chance' and open a new chapter in life. As a mature student you may be worried about how you'll cope with the demands of academic work – particularly if you've been out of education for a few years. However, there's lots of support available to help you make the most of your time at university or college.

Higher education offers excellent opportunities including:

- learning new skills
- gaining improved job prospects
- professional progression
- new life experience

How will it fit in?

Mature students are welcomed at universities and colleges up and down the country. They make a positive difference to the intellectual and cultural life of their course providers, bringing fresh insight, questioning minds, experience of life and work, and a passionate commitment to study.

- While higher education can be demanding, particularly for those with different commitments, mature students often find that course providers value their enthusiasm, skills and experience.
- For that reason, providers often offer flexibility in terms of admissions criteria and the types of learning programme they offer.
- Support is also available from specialist staff and mature students' unions and other informal networks.
