The Marginal Difference:

Differences and Changes in Wage Structures Richard B. Freeman, Lawrence F. Katz, 2007-12-01 During the past two decades wages of skilled workers in the United States rose while those of unskilled workers fell less educated young men in particular have suffered unprecedented losses in real earnings These twelve original essays explore whether this trend is unique to the United States or is part of a general growth in inequality in advanced countries Focusing on labor market institutions and the supply and demand forces that affect wages the papers compare patterns of earnings inequality and pay differentials in the United States Australia Korea Japan Western Europe and the changing economies of Eastern Europe Cross country studies examine issues such as managerial compensation gender differences in earnings and the relationship of pay to regional unemployment From this rich store of data the contributors attribute changes in relative wages and unemployment among countries both to differences in labor market institutions and training and education systems and to long term shifts in supply and demand for skilled workers These shifts are driven in part by skill biased technological change and the growing internationalization of advanced industrial economies

Who Wants What? David Rueda, Daniel Stegmueller, 2019-10-17 Why do some people support redistributive policies such as a generous welfare state social policy or protections for the poor and others do not The often implicit model behind much of comparative politics and political economy starts with redistribution preferences These affect how individuals behave politically and their behavior in turn affects the strategies of political parties and the policies of governments This book challenges some influential interpretations of the political consequences of inequality Rueda and Stegmueller provide a novel explanation of how the demand for redistribution is the result of expected future income the negative externalities of inequality and the relationship between altruism and population heterogeneity This innovative and timely volume will be of great interest to readers interested in the political causes and consequences of inequality

Current Issues in the Economics of Water Resource Management P. Pashardes, T.M. Swanson, A. Xepapadeas, 2013-04-17 The marginal price elasticities estimated by Martinez Espineira conforms to expectation The price specification that accounts for the changing proportion of water users in each block yields a higher elasticity 0.47 compared to the specification ignoring this feature of the data However this difference is not found to be statistically significant a result attributed to the low power of the test small sample size limiting the accuracy of estimates In conclusion the paper provides a theoretically correct price specification for demand functions under block pricing and aggregate data The empirical findings in the paper however are not conclusive and further empirical work using more data and alternative nonlinear demand functions is needed to show the practical implications of the arguments put forward by the Martinez Espineira's paper Static empirical consumer demand functions estimated with aggregate data are well known to suffer from serial correlation and other statistical problems associated with misspecified dynamics These dynamics arise because consumers do not react immediately to a change in prices due to their largely predetermined lifestyle In the case of demand for water for example current purchases can be largely predetermined due to commitments arising from past purchases such as swimming pools bathtubs dishwashing machines etc Muellerbauer and Pashardes 1992 show that the autoregressive nature of consumer demand data can be captured in a theoretically consistent manner by incorporating intertemporal aspects of consumer behaviour in the model through habit formation and durability
