Excerpt CHAPTER VII LABOR J DEGREE STOWHERE in the world avowed the correspondent of i 1 the London Times was the laboring man so prosperous as in the United States before the war. American labor at that time was jic as ge precious independent and fastidious who I ever condescended to work was jurg not on h j p f his daily bread j but also of a certain amount of j jace B t DEGREE S limfort the very hedger and ditcher had it in his power j to raise himself. He knew how to strike the best bargain h p w to stand on his rights and interests and how to put by a penny for a rainy day. If ever there was a country in which labor was in clover in which it was looked up to petted and humored it certainly was this North American community. 1 Suddenly with the introduction of paper j no j i e y _ this was changed. Peace in the industrial world gave way to discontent. Labor indeed remained scarce even more scarce than before but the laborer was no longer sure of his daily bread and of decent comfort. The ability to lay by for a rainy day was threatened and instead of being petted and humored labor came to regard itself as aggrieved. It assumed an attitude of hostility toward employers and took concerted measures in self defense. While there were many causes for this revolution there was one of far more influence than any other one in fact that created the atmosphere through which all other possible grievances quickly loomed large. This was stationary wages in the face of rising prices of commodities. 1 The London Times December 1 1863 Employers were wont to appropriate to themselves all or nearly all of the profits accruing from the higher prices without being willing to grant to the employees a fair share of these profits through the medium of higher wages. The situation
