

Assess the impacts of world trade in a food commodity and/or a manufactured product on your life and the lives of people across the globe. (20 marks)

World trade is the international exchange of goods, services and capital. Levels of world trade have significantly increased mostly due to globalisation, which has increased almost 400 times since 1950, allowing for countries to become more interconnected. For the purpose of this essay, I will look at the Transnational corporation - Apple. This essay will assess the impacts of world trade on my life and the lives of people around the globe, coming to the conclusion that there are more negative impacts than positive.

The increase in world trade in commodities such as Apple iPhones have had positive impacts on lives globally and my life. The trillion-dollar company that Apple is provides benefits to both, the host country, Foxconn city in Shenzhen, China and the home country the USA, California. Employing over 90,000 people in the US and over 1.3 million people in China, Apple provides a huge number of jobs. This makes it easier for people to earn wages despite obstacles such as geographical immobility or lack of education potentially bringing additional positives like better standards of living. Another positive impact of a large TNC which is largely interconnected, is agglomeration which can be caused through either government intervention, by creating special economic zones, through a reduction of corporation tax for example, Foxconn city in Shenzhen being the most successful SEZ in China. Or through there being an abundance of resources for example, Silicon Valley in California. This helps bring in many well educated and highly skilled staff to the area which can result in an increased wage rate for other employees in that area. On an individual scale, world trade has brought myself huge benefits allowing me access to good which are not able to be produced in my country such as Apple laptops, also food commodities like bananas, being the 4th most important product within least developed countries, of which I am able to purchase in any nearby supermarket for pennies. However, special economic zones can create social inequalities domestically created affluent areas and some very poor areas, this is a big problem in Johannesburg. This increased in skilled workers can cause brain drain in other countries as their skilled workers seek higher paying jobs. The positive impacts world trade brings are significant both globally and individually.

Additionally, world trade can bring negative impacts to individuals and globally. These issues are more prevalent in the host country, China. The high demand of TNC often means that regulations can be compromised. The working conditions in Apple factories are poor, featuring cramped dormitories of 12 for workers to live on site, with workers working 62-hour weeks and earning a little of £300 a month. There have been reports of child labour with many under 18's being employed as interns. There is also concerns of health and safety after reports of there being no PPE equipment, such as masks or goggles available to the workers, leaving them exposed to toxic chemicals. In addition, factories put up suicide nets, after 150 workers in 2012 got onto the roof and threatened to take their own lives, protest as a result to the poor working conditions. Environmental and social impacts are also seen in other countries such as Bangka province, Indonesia. In 2010 there were 44 deaths to people being buried alive in tin mines. The offshore mining has caused for the clear water to become cloudy, as a result the number of fish and shrimp has dropped rapidly leaving a ban on fishermen to fish. However this will result in further economic problems as their economy heavily relies on the tin and fish. In interconnected countries like the US, there can be dependency issues leaving them relying on other countries, leaving them the increasing threat of supply shocks, which are being seen recently in Yemen and the Red Sea. There are significant negative impacts to world trade both globally, but also to the individual workers in China.

In conclusion, the negative impacts felt globally and individually seriously outweigh the positive. With awful working conditions and factories with poor health and safety to the point where people are threatening their own lives as bargaining power. These impacts are sizeably contrasted to the positive impacts of increased jobs and wage levels. On a special scale the negative impacts are felt by the individuals in China but also globally by the tin mines in Indonesia. In order to control the
