

9.2 Results:

By using scaling techniques with a structured questionnaire for measuring attitudes of female workers on industrial disputes in the RMG sector in Bangladesh survey found some important aspects. The respondents were the female workers and some executives of the different garments factory. In the structured questionnaire, they were given options to check attitudes on some selected factors of reasons and resolution of industrial disputes. The study we have found most of the female workers considered 50% industrial disputes in very high while no-one commented that disputes are low or very low (Table-2A on variable ID38). Among the respondents, 66% think that employers are responsible for industrial disputes in RMG sector while only 8% give their opinion on employers side but only 8% think both parties may responsibly for generating industrial disputes in this sector. Again, respondents give their arguments that main reason of industrial disputes is the low salary, which is 94% (Table-2A on variable ID39). Many while less than 50% female workers participate in industrial disputes on which gives opinions about 66% respondents (Table-2A on variable ID4). On the issue of impact of industrial disputes, 94% interviewees replied that industrial disputes decreases productivity in RMG sector of Bangladesh. Though for settling industrial disputes all parties cooperation is very important but 54% and 32% respondent replied Govt. intervention and employers are responsible for settling industrial disputes respectively (Table-2A on variable ID55). Side by side, most of the respondents' (about 94%) belief govt. should have policy to solve industrial disputes in this sector (Table-2A on variable ID6).

9.3 Regression and Chi square test:

Analysis found relationship between status of industrial disputes and variables of attitudes on industrial disputes like causes of industrial disputes, responsible parties of industrial disputes, impact, and responsible parties for solving industrial disputes (Table: 9.2A), and linear regression is significant on the basis of relationship of dependent and independent variable. From the development of hypothesis was there is no significant impact of women workers role to minimize industrial disputes and increasing productivity in RMG sector of Bangladesh. i.e. significant level >0.05 in ANOVA and Chi-square test Analysis (Table: 9.2B & 2D). So, it indicates null hypothesis is rejected and alternative is accepted so, There is a significant impact of women workers role to minimize industrial disputes and increasing productivity in RMG sector of Bangladesh. In conclusion, we can say, female workers attitudes on different aspects are very much important for minimizing industrial disputes in RMG sector in Bangladesh.

10. Conclusions & Recommendations:

The industrial relation system is pre-dominantly conventional in nature rather than cooperative in Bangladesh. Industrial disputes is one of the important issues which is the result of Gap between the expectation of labor and management rather than logical. In recent times the rate of productivity is decreasing in the RMG sector, trade union affiliation is low in Bangladesh compared to many other developing countries. The main reasons for this are the relation between labor and management, demand supply gap of women workers, lack of initiative settling disputes for long run, lack of awareness and not taking a role of female workers to resolve disputes in RMG.
