Abstract: Coronary heart disease (CHD) remains a leading cause of mortality and morbidity worldwide, particularly due to complications following myocardial infarction (MI). Despite advancements in therapeutic strategies, the prognosis for MI patients varies significantly, necessitating a comprehensive approach that integrates genetic and non-genetic factors. This study addresses the knowledge gap by evaluating the influence of genetic polymorphisms and non-genetic factors on the 12-month prognosis of MI patients. Using a cohort of 250 post-MI patients, we conducted genetic analysis on polymorphisms of the AGT, ADRB1, APOE, LPL, and CYP2C19 genes and assessed their correlation with clinical outcomes using modern statistical methods. Our findings indicate significant associations between specific gene polymorphisms and patient prognosis, highlighting the importance of personalized medicine. The results suggest that incorporating genetic analysis into the management of MI patients can improve survival rates and inform targeted therapeutic interventions, offering a novel approach to enhancing patient care in clinical settings.

Keywords: sudden coronary death, stenosis, coronary arteries

1. Introduction

Coronary heart disease (CHD) is a major global health concern, characterized by an absolute disruption of blood supply to the myocardium due to damage to the coronary arteries. CHD, including myocardial infarction (MI), chronic heart failure (CHF), and arterial hypertension (AH), remains the leading cause of morbidity and mortality worldwide. In the Russian Federation, mortality rates from CHD are significantly higher compared to Europe and America, attributed to the varying effectiveness of both surgical and therapeutic treatments. Men are disproportionately affected, with clinical manifestations typically occurring when coronary artery stenosis exceeds 50%. Despite advancements in medical interventions, the prognosis for MI patients remains varied, underscoring the need for a more personalized approach to patient management.

This study aims to fill the knowledge gap by evaluating the outcomes and influences of genetic polymorphisms and non-genetic factors on the 12-month prognosis of MI patients. We analyzed genetic polymorphisms in genes such as AGT, ADRB1, APOE, LPL, and CYP2C19 and assessed their correlation with clinical outcomes. The study involved 250 MI patients, with genotyping conducted using polymerase chain reaction (PCR) and restriction fragment length polymorphism (RFLP) analysis. Our results indicated significant associations between specific gene polymorphisms and patient prognosis. For
