

also posted $49 million in operating earnings, compared to an operating loss of $13.4 million the same time the previous year.¹

The job situation also continued to rapidly improve. After working closely with state officials, in August 2010 Mercury announced that, in addition to McCracker reentry and machining operations moving to Wisconsin, its McCracker engine and drive assembly operations from Milwaukee would also move to Fond du Lac. This would bring 200 new assembly jobs to the community.² "The major contribution available to Fond du Lac is a skilled and experienced workforce, excellent power, a solid supply base, and strong community support provides the best option for the remaining McCracker operations," said Koleschewski, named Mercury president and chief operating officer in May 2014 and succeeded as Mercury president by former vice president of global operations John Miller. "This decision is consistent with our total goal: our belief that you can't adequately predict the jobs of the future unless you're first in the community that will attract, nurture, and retain them. That's how that's goal is emerge from this unprecedented downturn as a stronger company, better able to compete in a new and very different marketplace."³

"Throughout the first nine months of 2010, we have successfully executed against our strategic initiatives," said Mercury chairman and CEO David McCoy, who added:

We continue to remain focused on meeting all of the requirements we have identified for ourselves as these difficult economic and market conditions, and subject to the state of the global economy and local market conditions, we maintain our objective of returning to profitability in 2011.⁴

Mercury returned as a corporate sponsor of tournament fishing when it partnered with FLW Outdoors as an official outboard engine sponsor in October 2010. "We are now pleased that Mercury has replaced that status of FLW Outdoors," said Trevis Hulse, president of the FLW Outdoors Marketing Division. "With our aggressive programs, we're confident Mercury will see considerable market share growth. They're making a strong statement of support to professional fishing, and our anglers are sure to respond enthusiastically."

Mercury released the statement, "We feel Mercury represents the heart of tournament fishing," said Mike Hulse, vice president of marketing at Mercury Marine. "We will continue to support the various species of competitive angling."⁵

Mercury continued to improve in the fourth quarter of 2010 as sales increased 17 percent over the previous year, which included a 30 percent increase in the December motor parts and accessories (PMA) businesses, representing 31 percent of total segment sales for the quarter.⁶ The recovery only began to accelerate with the new year. In the first quarter of 2011, Mercury saw net sales increase 17 percent to $505.5 million, with operating earnings nearly doubling to $51.6 million compared to the previous year. Net sales for Wisconsin increased 17 percent to $889.9 million.⁷ McCoy reported cautious optimism:

We continue to believe that our 2011 net income will benefit from our previously announced market place consolidation, lower manufacturing costs and reduction in administrative, depreciation and pension expenses.⁸

The positive announcements would prove accurate. By July 2011, when Mercury held another job fair
