SKELETAL SYSTEM

THE FRAMEWORK OF THE HUMAN BODY

Read the text below and then answer the questions.

The skeletal system, or skeleton, is made of bones, cartilage, ligaments, and ligaments. It is one of the most important parts of the human body. Its main function is to support the body and protect the internal organs. It also plays a role in movement and blood production. In the adult human body, the skeletal system is a dynamic and interconnected network that adapts to the needs of the body.

Bones, the fundamental building blocks of the skeletal system, are made of a dense, hard material called bone tissue. They are designed to provide structural support and protect the internal organs. The skull, for example, protects the brain, while the rib cage protects the heart and lungs. The vertebrae, or spine, provide a central axis for the body and support the head.

Cartilage, a flexible, non-mineralized connective tissue, plays a crucial role in the skeletal system. It is found at the joints of bones, allowing smooth movement by reducing friction and absorbing shock. It also plays a role in the growth and development of bones. Ligaments, strong bands of connective tissue, connect bones to bones, providing stability and support. Tendons, which connect muscles to bones, are responsible for movement.

The skeletal system is not a static structure but rather a dynamic and adaptive one. It is constantly remodeling itself, with old bone being replaced by new bone. This process is regulated by hormones and mechanical stress. The skeletal system also plays a role in blood production, with the marrow inside the bones producing red and white blood cells.

The skeletal system is a complex and essential part of the human body. It provides the framework for the body and protects the internal organs. It also plays a role in movement and blood production. Understanding the skeletal system is crucial for understanding the human body and its functions.
