A Story of the Golden Age James Baldwin, 2015-06-26

Excerpt from A Story of the Golden Age: You have heard of Homer and of the two wonderful poems, the Iliad and the Odyssey, which bear his name. No one knows whether these poems were composed by Homer or whether they are the work of many different poets. And in fact it matters very little about their authorship. Everybody agrees that they are the grandest poems ever sung or written or read in this world, and yet how few persons comparatively have read them or know any thing about them except at second hand. Homer commences his story not at the beginning but in the midst of things; hence when one starts out to read the Iliad without having made some special preparation beforehand, he finds it hard to understand and is tempted in despair to stop at the end of the first book. A Story of the Golden Age James Baldwin, 2021-01-21 To the simple hearted folk who dwelt in that island three thousand years ago there was never a sweeter spot than sea girt Ithaca Rocky and rugged though it may have seemed yet it was indeed a smiling land embosomed in the laughing sea There the air was always mild and pure and balmy with the breath of blossoms the sun looked kindly down from a cloudless sky and storms seldom broke the quiet ripple of the waters which bathed the shores of that island home On every side but one the land rose straight up out of the deep sea to meet the feet of craggy hills and mountains crowned with woods Between the heights were many narrow dells green with orchards while the gentler slopes were covered with vineyards and the steeps above them gave pasturage to flocks of long wooled sheep and mountain climbing goats On that side of the island which lay nearest the rising sun there was a fine deep harbor for there the shore bent inward and only a narrow neck of land lay between the eastern waters and the western sea Close on either side of this harbor arose two mountains Neritus and Nereius which stood like giant watchmen overlooking land and sea and warding harm away and on the neck midway between these mountains was the king's white palace roomy and large with blossoming orchards to the right and the left and broad lawns in front sloping down to the water's edge

A Story of the Golden Age James Baldwin, 2021-02-21 Early the next morning while yet the dawn was waiting for the sun Odysseus arose and hastened to make ready for his journey The little galley which was to carry him across the sea had been already launched and was floating close to the shore and the oarsmen stood upon the beach impatient to begin the voyage The sea stores and the little chest in which the lad's wardrobe lay were brought on board and placed beneath the rowers benches The old men of Ithaca and the boys and the maidens hurried down to the shore that they might bid the voyagers God speed

Odysseus when all was ready spoke a few last kind words to his mother and sage Laertes and then with a swelling heart went up the vessel's side and sat down in the stern And Phemius the bard holding his sweet-toned harp followed him and took his place in the prow Then the sailors loosed the moorings and went on board and sitting on the rowers' benches wielded the long oars and the little vessel driven by their well-timed strokes turned slowly about and then glided smoothly across the bay and the eyes of all on shore were wet with tears as they prayed the rulers of the air and the sea that the voyagers might reach their wished-for port in safety and in due time come back unharmed to Ithaca No sooner had the vessel reached the open sea than Pallas Athena sent after it a gentle westwind to urge it on its way As the soft breeze laden with the perfumes of blossoming orchards stirred the water into rippling waves Phemius bade the rowers lay aside their oars and hoist the sail They heeded his behest and lifting high the slender mast they bound it in its place then they stretched aloft the broad white sail and the west wind caught and filled it and drove the little bark cheerily over the waves And the grateful crew sat down upon the benches and with Odysseus and Phemius the bard they joined in offering heartfelt thanks to Pallas Athena who had so kindly prospered them And by and by Phemius played soft melodies on his harp such as the sea nymphs liked to hear And all that summer day the breezes whispered in the rigging and the white waves danced in the vessel's wake and the voyagers sped happily on their way In the afternoon when they had begun somewhat to tire of the voyage Phemius asked Odysseus what they should do to lighten the passing hours Tell us some story of the olden time said Odysseus And the bard who was never better pleased than when recounting some wonderful tale sat down in the midships where the oarsmen could readily hear him and told the strange story of Phaethon the rash son of Helios Hyperion
