Taste & Smell

Taste & smell

Most of our special senses are chemoreception systems: gustation (taste) and olfaction (smell). The degree to which we respond to taste or olfaction, how many and how often we eat, and how we respond to molecules dissolved in fluid (taste) and solid (smell) are all determined by the state of our olfactory and gustatory systems. The sense of taste is less discriminatory than the sense of smell, and there is an overlap between taste receptors. The sense of smell is highly discriminatory, with several types of olfactory receptors, each responding to particular molecules. Taste and olfaction are related to smell, vision and hearing, important with the taste food substances, but taste is particularly affected by the sense of smell.

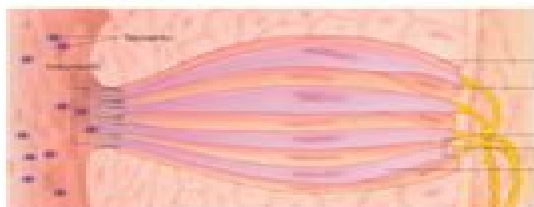

Concentrations

Taste receptors vary depending on the concentration of molecules in a given solution or solid. For low concentrations, taste and smell receptors may be more sensitive.

Gustation

Gustation, the sense of taste, gives us information about the food and drink that we consume. Taste buds on the primary gustatory organ, the tongue, contain chemoreceptors called gustatory cells. These taste buds have four basic components: sweet, sour, bitter and salty. A fifth taste, umami, or savory, has been reported. This flavor is associated with umami, or the good-taste of meat foods.

The taste bud

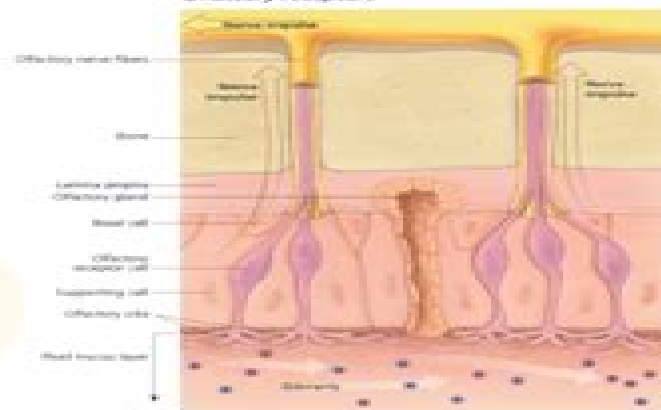

Umami, substances that produce taste, bind to receptor molecules on the surface of the microvilli. The resulting receptor potential travels to the basal end of the gustatory cell, where the signal is chemically transmitted to the supporting cell for molecular receptors. Gustatory cells live about 10 days, after which they are replaced by new cells generated from basal cells at the base of the taste buds.

Olfaction

The sense of smell is called olfaction, or the detection of odors. Olfaction depends on specialized chemical receptors, or chemoreceptors, located within the olfactory epithelium. These receptors are designed to respond to small amounts of an odorant, a molecule that can be smelled. The brain integrates the input from several different receptors to identify a particular odor. Humans can detect about 10,000 odors.

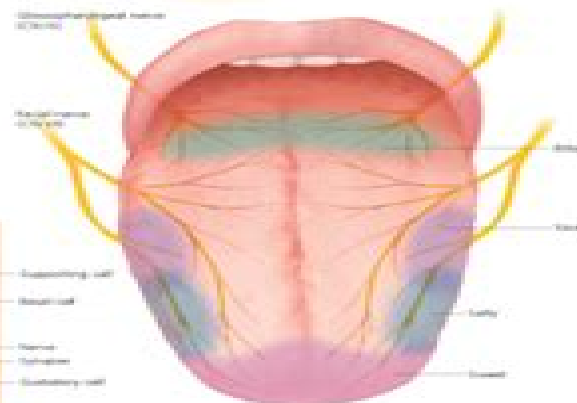

As air flows through the nose, the odors across the nasal cavity pass through the olfactory epithelium, bringing odorant molecules into contact with the olfactory neurons. Binding increases the ability to detect odors by increasing the volume of air inhaled, which can increase the number of receptors.

Olfactory receptors

Olfaction depends on the olfactory epithelium, where olfactory neurons are located. The olfactory epithelium is a specialized tissue that is located in the upper part of the nasal cavity. It is made up of olfactory neurons, supporting cells, and basal cells. The olfactory neurons are connected directly to the olfactory bulb, rather than through the olfactory nerve.

Compound sweet and salty tastes, we are left with more sensitive to taste compounds, and about 1,000 taste buds are sensitive to taste compounds. The taste buds are located on the tongue, and each taste bud contains several taste hairs. The taste hairs are made of microvilli, and they extend into the taste pore. The taste hairs are made of microvilli, and they extend into the taste pore. The taste hairs are made of microvilli, and they extend into the taste pore.

The synapse

Neurons communicate with other cells at a synapse, the site of a nerve impulse transmission. The space between the presynaptic, or sending, neuron and the postsynaptic, or receiving, cell is called the synaptic cleft. An impulse enters at the tip of the axon, the terminal button, where "neurotransmitter" molecules called neurotransmitters. These highly specialized chemicals carry nerve impulses from the presynaptic cell to the postsynaptic cell. The impulse enters the cell, where it is released into the synaptic cleft, where it is released into the synaptic cleft, where it is released into the synaptic cleft.
