

KANTIAN PHILOSOPHY AND SOCIOLOGICAL METHODOLOGY

SUSAN STEDMAN JONES

This article concerns the Kantian influence on the development of sociological methodologies. This influence has been to develop two distinct, but opposing views on the appropriate mode of social explanation. It will be argued that the animosity between the rival schools of methodology, that is between those who would be characterized as 'positivist', and those who drawing on phenomenology and existentialism, would reject the claim that sociology is a science, can be in part explained as a difference in values. This difference in values centres around a difference in conceptions of the nature of man.

To develop this argument it is necessary to discuss briefly a number of related issues. Firstly it will be argued that not only social theories, but also social methodologies are bound up with the question of the nature of man, and that therefore methodologies have not just conceptual, but moral implications. A second issue is of the relationship between sociological method and philosophy. It will be argued that sociological methods trade off or are developed out of philosophies: what is seen as methodologically viable is determined by philosophical achievements. Both are expressions of man's self knowledge and self awareness. The development of a descriptive/empirical subject concerned with the nature of social life historically developed later than an abstract subject concerned with the nature of meaning and knowledge, but both can be seen as expressions of man's self knowledge. No claims will be made for the social/economic/historical nature of philosophical achievements – the concern is solely with the logic of certain concepts that run through sociological methods, and their philosophical origin. It will be claimed that it was the philosophical achievement of Kant that paved the way for the development of a distinctive sociological method. The main aim of the paper is to trace a line of development in sociological method that can be traced back to its philosophical forebear. This line of development, originally Janus-faced, reflecting the twin concerns of Kantian philosophy, morality and science, has now split into opposing camps upholding distinct and mutually exclusive conceptions of man.

It has been recognized that theoretical disputes about the nature of social action are in part disputes over the nature of man. That is, it is impossible to say what kind of action social action is without making certain assumptions about the nature of the actor himself. It has not, however, been so explicitly recognized that methodological disputes, about the appropriate method of explaining social action, are also bound up with the question of the nature of man. What sort of being man is, is an issue intrinsically tied to the question of how we explain his action. Are law-like statements based on behavioural variables the right way to achieve understanding, or should the subjectivity of consciousness be the basis of all accounts of social action? To achieve at least adequate, if not exhaustive understanding, one must assume that the chosen method will reveal the nature of the subject under discussion. One cannot imagine the nature of coal being fully revealed by subjective analysis, nor can one put a motive under a microscope. Thus the chosen method reveals something of what is thought to be the nature of the subject. For example, if it is argued that the empirical approach is an adequate analysis of social action, then the implication is that man is essentially a member of the world of sense, complicated and intricate, but amenable, Croon, Jacques A. Hagenaars, 2009-04-03 Marginal Models for Dependent Clustered and Longitudinal Categorical Data provides a comprehensive overview of the basic principles of marginal modeling and offers a wide range of possible applications Marginal models are often the best choice for answering important research questions when dependent observations are involved as the many real world examples in this book show In the social behavioral educational economic and biomedical sciences data are often collected in ways that introduce dependencies in the observations to be compared For example the same respondents are interviewed at several occasions several members of networks or groups are interviewed within the same survey or within families both children and parents are investigated Statistical methods that take the dependencies in the data into account must then be used e g when observations at time one and time two are compared in longitudinal studies At present researchers almost automatically turn to multi level models or to GEE estimation to deal with these dependencies Despite the enormous potential and applicability of these recent developments they require restrictive assumptions on the nature of the dependencies in the data The marginal models of this book provide another way of dealing with these dependencies without the need for such assumptions and can be used to answer research questions directly at the intended marginal level The maximum likelihood method with its attractive statistical properties is used for fitting the models This book has mainly been written with applied researchers in mind It includes many real world examples explains the types of research questions for which marginal modeling is useful and provides a detailed description of how to apply marginal

New Methods for Measuring and Analyzing Segregation Mark Fossett, 2017-09-14 This book is open access under a CC BY NC 2.5 license This book introduces new methods for measuring and analyzing residential segregation It begins by placing all popular segregation indices in the difference of group means framework wherein index scores can be obtained as simple differences of group means on individual level residential attainments scored from area racial composition Drawing on the insight that in this framework index scores are additively determined by individual residential attainments the book shows that the level of segregation in a given city can be equated to the effect of group membership e.g. race on individual residential attainments This unifies separate research traditions in the field by joining the analysis of segregation at the aggregate level with the analysis of residential attainments for individuals Next it shows how segregation analysis can be extended by using multivariate attainment models to assess the impact of group membership i.e. the level of segregation for a city while including controls for other relevant individual characteristics e.g. income education language nativity etc It then illustrates how one can use these models to quantitatively assess the extent to which segregation traces to impacts of group membership on residential attainments versus other factors such as group differences in income The book then shows how micro level attainment models can be used to study macro level variation in segregation specifically by estimating multi level models of individual residential attainments to assess how the effect of group membership i e segregation index scores vary with city characteristics Finally the book introduces refined versions of popular indices that are free of the vexing problem of upward bias This improves the quality of segregation measurement directly at the level of individual cases and expanding the number of cases that can be safely included in empirical studies
