

TALES OF NATURAL AND UNNATURAL CATASTROPHES

Patricia Highsmith, author of Strangers on a Train and the superbly chilling Ripley crime novels, here turns her pen to the macabre in a series of brilliant and haunting short fictions. Grotesque tumors swell unstoppably above ground in a graveyard, insecticide-resistant giant cockroaches take command of one of New York's swishest apartment buildings, a UN mission meets a fearsome end in Africa. Whales, the Pope, and a trigger-happy American President, all form the subject matter of individual stories of modern catastrophes which — whether natural or unnatural — fix the reader with the dark perception of Patricia Highsmith's vision.

'Highsmith's prose is as laconic, as spare, as understated and as stylish as ever...all of these stories have something to say and most of them say it very well; bleakly, nastily, effectively... topical prophecy with a fine edge and one of the blackest stylists in the business.'

TIME OUT
